"It seems clear from the language of the amendment itself, without regard to any other sources which might be used to aid in determining the intent, that its dominant purpose was to insure that the States be represented in the Senate by persons elected by the people. It seems equally clear that elections for such purpose are to be held not only in cases where the 6-year term of a Senator is about to expire, but also where a vacancy has been created by the death, resignation, or removal of a Senator prior to the expiration of his full term since the executive authority of a State is required to 'issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.' However, the inclusion of the provisions relating to vacancies.' However, the inclusion of the provisions relating to vacancies under which the executive authority of a State may be authorized by the legislature 'to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct' gives rise to a number of problems which have a direct bearing upon the status of an appointed Senator after such an election has been held the status of an appointed Senator after such an election has been held.

"In the first place, it is not entirely clear how the language 'as the legislature may direct' is to be construed, and it is at least susceptible of more than one interpretation. It might be argued, for example, that a broad power was thus granted to the legislature of each State not only with respect to the time, manner, and place of holding such elections but also with respect to the manner of filling the vacancies after an election has been held and the terms for which temporary appointments are to be made. It is not believed that this construction is justified when it is recalled that the main purpose of the amendment was to deprive the legislatures of their power of electing Senators. Moreover, if such a construction were to prevail it is conceivable that the purpose of the amendment might be defeated by legislative provisions which would postpone for several years the holding of elections to fill such vacancies or which would authorize the Governor to make senatorial appointments which would expire but a short tions to fill such vacancies or which would authorize the Governor to make senatorial appointments which would expire but a short time before the end of the terms for which their predecessors were elected. Consequently, a more reasonable interpretation of the language 'as the legislature may direct' would confine it to providing for the circumstances under which the elections to fill such vacancies are to be held, with the result that it would correspond more closely to the provisions of Article I, Section 4, of the Constitution under which the legislatures of the several States are to prescribe merely the times, places, and manner of holding congressional elections, subject to certain modifications which the Congress may make sional elections, subject to certain incomessions which the language may make.

"A more serious problem arises in connection with the language which authorizes temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election.' The vacancies referred to are obviously those created by the death, resignation, or removal of the Senators who preceded the appointees. Here again more than one interpretation of the language quoted is possible, especially in view of the fact that in the ordinary case a vacancy in an office is considered to be filled only when the person selected to fill the vacancy has been duly qualified and has assumed the duties of the office. It may be argued, therefore, with some plausibility that the language above referred to should be construed to mean that a temporary appointment to the Senate may be made which will expire only after the people at an election have elected a person to fill the existing vacancy and such person has qualified as a Senator by taking the oath of office and entering upon the duties of such office.

"In spite of the fact that the legislatures in a number of States cancy and such person has qualified as a Senator by taking the oath of office and entering upon the duties of such office.

"In spite of the fact that the legislatures in a number of States have apparently assumed that this is the correct interpretation and have authorized the Governors thereof to make temporary senatorial appointments which will expire when their successors have been 'elected and qualified' it seems rather unlikely that such 'temporary' appointments were intended to extend as far as that when the general purpose of the amendment is considered. If this had been the intention, it is reasonable to assume that it would have been more clearly stated and not left to mere inference. Furthermore, the emphasis placed upon the duty of the executive authority to issue writs of election 'to fill such vacancies' and upon the making of temporary appointments until the people 'fill such vacancies by election' would tend to negative any such interpretation. In addition, in view of the general purpose of providing for representation in the Senate by persons elected by popular vote both for full terms and for unexpired terms it seems reasonable to assume that no temporary appointment was to be authorized except for the intervening period between the creation of a vacancy and the day when the people by their votes actually elect a successor, or, in other words, until they elect a person to fill the vacancy. If the Senate subsequently refused to permit the person so elected to take his seat, or such person died or resigned either before or after he took the oath of office, there would then be a vacancy to which a temporary appointment might be made.

"It is submitted that this interpretation is more in harmony with the spirit of the amendment since it makes the action of the present a temporary appointment might be made.

"It is submitted that this interpretation is more in harmony with the spirit of the amendment, since it makes the action of the people in electing a successor the determining factor with respect to the duration of a temporary appointment to the Senate. Unfortunately, there seems to have been no discussion of this particular matter on the floor of either House when the seventeenth amendment was proposed, but the interpretation which has been suggested as being the most consistent with the purposes of the amendment is supported by the subsequent statements of at least two Senators who were in Congress at the time and by an opinion by Vice President Marshall.

"On October 15, 1918, the Vice President addressed the following letter to the financial clerk of the Senate:

letter to the financial clerk of the Senate:

""THE VICE PRESIDENT'S CHAMBER,
"'Washington, October 15, 1918.

"'CHARLES F. PACE,

"'Financial Secretary, United States Senate." My DEAR MR. PACE:

"'In response to your inquiry as to the tenure of office of tem-

In response to your inquiry as to the tenure of office of temporary appointment of Senators by the Governors of the several States, I have the honor to give you the following opinion:

"The supreme law of the land upon this question is the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Neither Congress nor the general assembly of any State of this Union can add to or take therefrom. The portion of the seventeenth amendment which has to do with this question resident. eenth amendment which has to do with this question reads as follows:

""When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in State shall issue writs the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct."

"To my mind this clause authorizes the legislature of any State

"To my mind this clause authorizes the legislature of any state to empower the executive to make a temporary appointment until an election; that the legislature could either provide for a special election to take place within a reasonable time, or a fair construction of the constitutional provision would permit the legislature to delay the election until the next general election in the ture to delay the election until the next general election in the State.

"It may be contended with some plausibility that the election might be postponed until the expiration of the term of the Senator whose death occasioned the temporary appointment. Personally, I do not so believe, nor is it needful under present circumstances to express an opinion upon this subject.

"The tenure of office of those holding temporary appointments in the United States runs until the people have filled the vacancies by election, as the legislature may direct. In all cases now under consideration the people will vote for United States Senators to fill the vacancies now being filled by these temporary appointments upon the 5th day of November next. The sole question for determination is, therefore, What constitutes an election?

question for determination is, therefore, What constitutes an election?

"'The phraseology of the Constitution of the United States is radically different from that of many of the Commonwealths. Numerous State constitutions provide a tenure of office and then add that the incumbent shall hold the office for that period of time and until his successor is elected and qualified. In the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States nothing is said about holding beyond the election.

"In the absence of disqualification to hold office, Senators will be elected on the 5th day of November next. They may be compelled to run the gamut of executive, administrative, judicial, and senatorial investigation before they are entitled to qualify and take their seats as Members of the United States Senate and take their seats as Members of the United States Senate. They may fail to even reach the coveted positions. Equitably, it would seem that the present incumbents ought to be permitted to hold until the successors elected on the 5th of November have been sworn in as Senators of the United States. Such, however, is not the law. The tenure of office of all Senators now holding temporary appointment in the Senate of the United States will expire upon the 5th day of November next, and in the discharge of my sworn duty I can certify no compensation after that date.

"I regret being compelled to render this opinion, but I think my duty as plain as a pikestaff.

"Very respectfully,

"Thos. R. Marshall.

"'(63 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 12.)'
"A few weeks after this opinion had been rendered a resolution was reported to the Senate providing for the payment out of the Senate contingent fund of compensation to Senator Benet, of Senate contingent fund of compensation to Senator Benet, or South Carolina, one of the appointed Senators to whom the opinion related, for the period from November 6 to December 2, 1918, during which he had served as a Senator. Objection to the consideration of the resolution was made by Senator Curtis, and in the course of his remarks he said:

"I understand that the Senator-elect from the State has been read the selection, the selection of the selection. Under the Constitution of the selection.

"I understand that the Senator-elect from the State has been paid the salary from the date of the election. Under the Constitution the term of Senator Benet expired on the day of the election of his successor. Therefore I doubt very much if he is entitled to this extra salary. Surely Congress will not pay a double salary during that time. If the Senator-elect has not been paid, then there might be favorable action upon the resolution, but personally I shall object to its consideration until we can get the facts in the case."

get the facts in the case."

"The attention of Senator Curtis was then called to the fact that his predecessor, who had also been appointed, had been paid until the Senator took his seat, and he replied:

"Senator Benson did draw the salary until I took the cath; that was the old practice. Before the Constitution was amended, a Senator was appointed to serve until his successor was elected and qualified. I was elected by the legislature in 1907. I was not elected until the 23d day of January, and I took my seat in the Senate on the 29th of January. But under the Constitution as it now is, with the constitutional amendment with regard to the election of United States Senators, a newly elected Senator to fill election of United States Senators, a newly elected Senator to fill an unexpired term is entitled to his office and entitled to pay from the day he is elected. That question has not been decided and there are no precedents since the adoption of the constitutional entered and there are no precedents. tional amendment.

"I am informed that the financial clerk or the Secretary has been notified that the new Senators are entitled to their pay from the date of the election. If that is so and this resolution is adopted, Mr. Benet will be paid for time for which the newly elected Senator has been paid. I do not think the Senate wants to set a precedent of that kind."

"The resolution was then placed on the calendar, and on December 6, 1918, it was recommitted to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate (57 Congressional Record, pp. 32 and 177-178). There is no indication that any action was taken subsequently with respect to the resolution. "A similar situation arose on December 7, 1922, when a resolution was reported for the payment out of the Senate contingent fund of compensation to Senator Rawson, of Iowa, for the period from November 8 to December 1, 1922. Although he had been appointed to the Senate and an election had been held on November 8 at which Senator Brookhart had been elected, Senator Rawson. ber 8 at which Senator Brookhart had been elected, Senator Raw-son continued to serve until the certificate of election of his successor was presented and he had taken the oath of office. In the course of the debate on the resolution it was brought out that Senator Brookhart's salary began on the day he was elected and Senator Heflin then said:

and Senator Heffin then said:

"'Mr. President, in my own case I was elected on November 2, 1920, and I drew the salary from that day. The term of Governor Comer, who was appointed to succeed Senator Bankhead, expired on the 2d day of November. My term commenced then. I drew the salary. Governor Comer never drew any salary after the 2d of November. It ought to be made clear that the sitting Member's term, the term for which he was appointed, expires on the day of the election. I think that is what we all meant when we amended the Constitution' (64 Congressional Record, p. 171).

"Senator Spencer subsequently said:

"As a matter of fact, this has been the precedent of the Senate: When a Senator is appointed his salary commences from the day

When a Senator is appointed his salary commences from the day of his appointment. When the election occurs his salary automatically ends, even though he continues on, as in the case of the Senator from Iowa or as in the case of the Senator from Georgia. His salary automatically ends on the day of election, and the salary of the man who was elected, even though he does and the salary of the man who was elected, even though he does not come in and qualify for a week or two, commences, under the present practice, on the day of his election.

"'I was an illustration of that very principle. I was elected on November 3, perhaps, 1918. I did not take my seat until the 21st of November, but my salary dated back from the 1st of November, and the salary of the appointee whose place I took, Mr. Wilfiey, ended upon the day of the election. That has been the unbroken precedent of the Senate * * * (64 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 172).

"The resolution for the payment of compensation to Senator Rawson out of the contingent fund for the period from November 8 to December 1, 1922, was later agreed to, as well as a resolution for the payment of clerical services rendered to him for the same period (64 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 179).

"The only other case of a somewhat similar character which seems to have arisen since the ratification of the seventeenth amendment was that of Mrs. Felton, of Georgia, who had been appointed to the Senate on October 3, 1922, after the death of Senator Watson and who was permitted to take the oath of office on November 21, 1922, notwithstanding the fact that Senator George had been elected on November 7 to fill the unexpired term of Senator Watson. At that time Senator Walsh, of Montana, urged that Mrs. Felton was entitled to be sworn in, and after referring to several cases prior to the seventeenth amendment in which Senators who had been appointed had held their seats until their successors had appeared, or had appeared and qualified, he concluded his speech by saying:

"In no instance does it appear that any controversy was ever raised as to the right of the Governor's appointee to sit and participate in the deliberations of the Senate until his or her successor appeared with the proper credentials.

"These are all, of course, constructions of the original Constitution, and the seventeenth amendment was adopted in view of the practical construction of the tion, and the seventeenth amendment was adopted in view of the practical construction given to the corresponding provision of the work of the fathers by the Senate itself. Under well-established practical construction given to the corresponding provision of the work of the fathers by the Senate itself. Under well-established principles of construction, the language being changed only so far as was necessary to express the purpose to change the method of election, the people endorsed the construction of the clause of the Constitution in question implied in the practice which had been observed by the Senate, and intended that the amendment should be similarly construed.

"I have said this much because I did not like to have it appear be similarly construed.

"'I have said this much because I did not like to have it appear, if the lady is sworn in—as I have no doubt she is entitled to be sworn in—that the Senate had so far departed from its duty in the premises as to extend so grave a right to her as a favor, or as a mere matter of courtesy, or being moved by a spirit of gallantry, but rather that the Senate, being fully advised about it, decided that she was entitled to take the oath."

"There was no further discovering of the reatter, and Mr. Belter."

she was entitled to take the oath."

"There was no further discussion of the matter and Mrs. Felton then took the oath of office and became the first woman to sit in the Senate (63 Congressional Record, pp. 11-14).

"Two days later, on November 23, 1922, Senator Walsh objected to the adoption of a resolution which had been offered by Senator Harris for the payment out of the Senate contingent fund of compensation to Mrs. Felton and mileage for the period from November 8 to November 21, 1922. The reason which he gave for his opposition to the resolution was that Mrs. Felton should be paid out of the regular appropriation as every other Senator is paid and that to make the payment out of the contingent fund 'would throw very grave doubt upon the action taken by the Senate in seating Mrs. Felton as a Senator' (63 Congressional Record, pp. 47-48). However, when the resolution was reported to the Senate favorably, without amendment, on December 4, 1922, it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to (63 Congressional Record, p. 452).

without amendment, on agreed to (63 Congressional Record, p. 452).

"In view of the action taken by the Senate in making payments out of the contingent fund to Mrs. Felton and Mr. Rawson, and in refusing to make a similar payment to Mr. Benet, it might be reasonably inferred that any case in which a senatorial appointee held over beyond election day was thought to be of an exceptional character and that the position taken by Senator Walsh was not recognized as being controlling.

"In passing, it might be noted that the cases specifically referred to by Senator Walsh in support of his position were all prior to 1851, and it is quite probable that because of the uncertainties and delays surrounding the transmission of news and intelligence up to that time the Senate in most cases would have had no official knowledge that a person had been elected by the State legislature to succeed an appointed Senator until the credentials of that person had been presented to the Senate. Consequently, it is not unreasonable that under such circumstances the appointed Senator should have continued to serve either until his successor appeared in person to present his credentials or at least until such credentials had been received by the Senate in some other way.

"Since December 1922 there appears to have been no further consideration in the Senate of the right of a person appointed to the Senate to hold office beyond the day on which his successor is elected, but this may be due in part to changes in the laws relating to the payment of salaries of Senators which fixed the time for which each Senator was to be paid. These changes will be discussed below, but regardless of the reasons for making them or of their practical application they can hardly be said to be determinative of the proper interpretation to be placed upon the limitation of the seventeenth amendment with respect to the time during which temporary appointments to the Senate remain in effect. That question must be decided in the light of the purposes for which the a together with the language of the amendment itself, seem sufficiently definite to justify the conclusion that any such temporary appointment will expire on the day on which the successor to the appointee is elected, irrespective of what the statutes may provide at the moment with regard to the amount of compensation each of them is to receive.

"'Note.—Further support for the conclusion reached above will be found in the appendix to this memorandum.'

"At the time the seventeenth amendment was ratified the pay-"At the time the seventeenth amendment was ratified the payment of compensation to Senators out of the regular annual appropriations for salaries was governed by the following provision of the Legislative Appropriation Act of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat. 162): "Provided, That the salaries of Senators elected or appointed to fill vacancies in the Senate and of Senators elected for a full term subsequent to the commencement of such term, shall commence on the day of their election or appointment."

"This provision remained in effect until 1923 and it was uniformly construed to mean that the salary of an appointed Senator ceased on the day his successor was elected. The 'unbroken precedent' of the Senate in this respect was referred to on December 7.

edent' of the Senate in this respect was referred to on December 7, edent' of the Senate in this respect was referred to on December 7, 1922, by Senator Spencer when the Rawson resolution was before the Senate, and his remarks at that time have previously been quoted in this memorandum. (See p. 5.)

"On December 15, 1922, a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 248) which had been referred to at the time of the debate on the Rawson resolution was reported to the Senate and passed. It had the effect of superseding the law relating to the payment of salaries of Senators which had been in force since 1894, and it is reported in the Congressional Record as follows:

"Resolved etc. That salaries of Senators empirited to fill vecen-

"'Resolved, etc., That salaries of Senators appointed to fill vacancies in the Senate shall commence on the day of their appointment and continue until their successors are elected and qualified; and salaries of Senators elected to fill vacancies in the Senate shall commence on the day they qualify' (64 Congressional Record,

"The House, on February 5, 1923, added the following proviso:
"'Provided, That where no appointments have been made to fill such vacancies the salaries of Senators elected to fill such vacancies such vacancies the salaries of Senators elected to fill such vacancies shall commence on the day following their election' (64 Congressional Record, p. 3090).

"Upon the motion of Senator Spencer the Senate concurred in the House amendment on February 6, 1923 (64 Congressional Record, p. 3103), and the resolution became operative when it was approved by the President on February 10, 1923 (42 Stat. 1225).

"The discussion in the Senate with respect to the proposed change in the 1894 law is somewhat confusing (see 64 Congressional Record, pp. 171-172), but the provisions of the new law were clear and payments were made in the manner prescribed therein until February 6, 1931, when the law was changed with respect to payment of salaries of Senators who had been elected to succeed appointees at a special election held during a sine die adjournment of the Senate.

"It might be argued perhaps that the change made in 1923

"It might be argued perhaps that the change made in 1923 amounted to an interpretation by the Senate of the limitation contained in the seventeenth amendment with respect to the duration of temporary appointments to the Senate. There is some contained in the seventeenth amendment with respect to the duration of temporary appointments to the Senate. There is some doubt about this, however, in view of the fact that the sponsor of the resolution, Senator Curtis, had previously expressly declared that the term of office of a person appointed to the Senate expired under the Constitution on the day his successor was elected. His statement in this connection has been already quoted in this memorandum. (See p. 5.) At any rate, whatever the real purpose for changing the old law may have been, there seems to have been no contests on the part of any Senators with respect to the amount of compensation to which they were entitled while the 1923 law was in effect. 1923 law was in effect.

"On January 22, 1931, when the first deficiency appropriation bill was under consideration in the Senate, Senator Jones, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, recommended that the 1923 law relating to the payment of salaries to Senators be amended by adding the following provided:

adding the following proviso:

"Provided further, That when Senators have been elected during a sine die adjournment of the Senate, at a time other than a general election, to succeed appointees, the salaries of Senators so elected shall commence on the day following their election, and the salaries of such appointees shall cease on that date (74 Congressional Record, 2871).

"The amendment was agreed to without debate, was concurred in by the House, and become operative on February 6, 1931, when H. R. 15592, to which the amendment had been added, was signed by the President (46 Stat. 1065).

"The effect of adding the proviso to the 1923 law was to make a distinction of the provisor of the second of the provisor of the second of the se distinction for the purposes of compensation between Senators elected to succeed appointees, depending upon whether they were elected at a general or at a special election. Thereafter, if a Senator was elected at a general election to succeed an appointee his salary was to commence only on the day he qualified, and that of the appointee was to continue until the Senator so elected had qualified. In this respect there was no change in the 1923 law. On the other hand, under the new proviso, if a Senator was elected to succeed an appointee at a special election held during a sine die adjournment of the Senate his salary was to commence on the day following his election, and it was expressly provided that the salary of the appointee was to cease on that date.

"The constitutional question as to whether an appointee to the Senate is entitled to hold office after a successor is elected was apparently not considered in 1931 when the above change was made in the compensation provisions, but on principle it would seem that no distinction can be made between such appointees depending upon whether their successors are elected at a special or at a general election, or whether any such election takes place during a sine die adjournment of the Senate or not. The general intent of the 1923 and 1931 provisions with respect to the payment of salaries seems clear, however; namely, that no appointee to the Senate was to be paid any amount as salary out of the regular appropriations for salaries for any period during which compensation was to be paid to his elected successor. Otherwise, a deficiency appropriation would have to be made, since the regular appropriations for each fiscal year are sufficient to pay but two Senators from each State.

"On June 19, 1934, the following provisions relating to salaries of Senators became operative and superseded the provisions of of Senators became operative and superseded the provisions of 1923 and 1931 referred to above:

"Salaries of Senators appointed to fill vacancies in the Senate shall commence on the day of their appointment and continue until their successors are elected and qualified.

"Salaries of Senators elected to fill such vacancies shall commence on the day they qualify.

"When no appointments have been made the salaries of Senators elected to fill such vacancies shall commence on the day folators elected to fill such vacancies shall commence on the day following their election.

"When Senators have been elected during a sine die adjournment of the Senate to succeed appointees, the salaries of Senators so elected shall commence on the day following their election.

"When Senators have been elected during a session to succeed appointees, but have not qualified, the salaries of Senators so elected shall commence on the day following the sine die adjournment of the Senate' (48 Stat. 1022).

"These provisions were added to H. R. 9830 in the Senate on June 15, 1934, without debate (78 Congressional Record, p. 11608).

"The first three paragraphs above quoted are substantially the same as the 1923 law. The fourth paragraph corresponds somewhat to the proviso that was added in 1931, but the distinction between Senators elected to succeed appointees at a special election and at a general election was eliminated, as well as the express provision that the salaries of any appointees whose successors were elected during a sine die adjournment of the Senate at a special vision that the salaries of any appointees whose successors were elected during a sine die adjournment of the Senate at a special election should cease on the day following such election. As a result, the first paragraph of the 1934 law provided in effect that the salaries of appointees should continue until their successors had been elected and qualified, the second provided that the salaries of the successors should commence only when they had qualified, and the fourth provided that the salaries of the successors, if they had been elected during a sine die adjournment of the Senate either at a general election or at a special election, should commence on the day following their election. The fourth paragraph was obviously intended to be an exception to the first and second, and although nothing was said about the salary of an appointee ceasing in a case to which the fourth paragraph was applicable, it seems apparent that no overlapping payments were intended. On the contrary, it must have been assumed that the salary of an appointee would end when his successor was elected under the circumstances indicated, and that to add an express provision to circumstances indicated, and that to add an express provision to circumstances indicated, and that to add an express provision to that effect as was done in 1931 was unnecessary.

"This construction seems to be confirmed by the provisions of the fifth paragraph of the 1934 law. It made a further exception to the second paragraph, and to the general provision for continuing salary payments to appointees until their successors had qualified, by providing in effect that if a successor to any such appointee was elected during a session of the Senate but did not qualify during the session, his salary was to commence on the day following the sine die adjournment of the Senate. The only reasonable inference would seem to be that the salary of the appointee in such a case would continue only until the sine die adjournment of the Senate when that of his successor commenced. adjournment of the Senate when that of his successor commenced, even though nothing was said expressly about the salary of the appointee ceasing at that point. Conversely, it would be clearly unreasonable to construe the language of the 1934 law as continuing salary payments to an appointee out of the regular appropria-tions until his successor had qualified, when express provision was made for paying the successor after the session was over although he had not qualified. "As there was no debate in either House on the 1934 changes in the salary provisions it does not appear whether any consideration was given at that time to the constitutional question with respect to the duration of temporary appointments to the Senate. It should perhaps be noted, however, that a distinction was actually made between appointees whose successors were elected during a sine die between appointees whose successors were elected during a sine die adjournment of the Senate and those whose successors were elected while the Senate was in session. It may be fairly inferred from the 1934 provisions as a whole that in the first case the salary of the appointee was to cease on the day his successor was elected, whether he qualified later or not, while it is equally clear that in the second case the salary of the appointee was to continue until his successor qualified, or until the sine die adjournment of the Senate if the successor did not qualify before then. It necessarily follows that the salary of an appointee in the second case was to follows that the salary of an appointee in the second case was to cease when his successor qualified, or when a sine die adjournment intervened before his successor qualified, and that in no event was the salary of the appointee to be paid after such adjournment whether the successor later qualified or not.

"It seems therefore that under the 1934 law the duration of temporary appointments to the Sonate for the supressertion."

"It seems therefore that under the 1934 law the duration of temporary appointments to the Senate for the purposes of compensation at least was to be determined as follows: (1) By the date of election of the successor to the appointee if such election took place during a sine die adjournment of the Senate, (2) by the date of qualification of the successor to the appointee if he was elected during a session of the Senate and qualified before it adjourned sine die, and (3) by the date of the sine die adjournment of the Senate if the successor to the appointee was elected during the session of the Senate and failed to qualify before such adjournment. In passing, it should be emphasized again that under the seventeenth amendment no apparent distinction is made between the terms of office ment no apparent distinction is made between the terms of office of appointees depending upon whether their successors are elected during a session of the Senate or not, or whether a sine die adjournment intervenes before the successors have qualified, and on principle, it would seem that the amendment contemplates that the date of termination of temporary appointments to the Senate should be the same in all cases, regardless of any provisions that may be made and acquiesced in for the payment of salaries. If the conclusion reached in the first part of this memorandum is correct, the date on which the term of office of an appointee to the Senate ends in a constitutional sense is the date on which his successor is elected. The only possible alternative would seem to be the date on which the successor to the appointee is qualified, although it might be contended, of course, that the termination of such temporary appointments is to be governed solely by the statutory provisions of the several States pursuant to which the Governors are authorized to make such appointments.

visions of the several states pursuant to which the Governors are authorized to make such appointments.

"The 1934 compensation provisions were apparently thought to be rather unsatisfactory, and on February 13, 1935, they were replaced by the following provisions which are still in force:

"Salaries of Senators appointed to fill vacancies in the Senate

"'Salaries of Senators appointed to fill vacancies in the Senate shall commence on the day of their appointment and continue until their successors are elected and qualified: Provided, That when Senators have been elected during a sine die adjournment of the Senate to succeed appointees, the salaries of Senators so elected shall commence on the day following their election.

"'Salaries of Senators elected during a session to succeed appointees shall commence on the day they qualify: Provided, That when Senators have been elected during a session to succeed appointees, but have not qualified, the salaries of Senators so elected shall commence on the day following the sine die adjournment of the Senate.

"When no appointments have been made, the salaries of Senators ment of the Senate.

"When no appointments have been made, the salaries of Senators elected to fill such vacancies shall commence on the day following their election" (49 Stat. 22–23).

"When these provisions were offered in the Senate on January 28, 1935, as amendments to a resolution making additional appropriations for certain governmental agencies (H. J. Res. 88), Senator Adams stated that they were to clarify the 1934 law in reference to the payments of salaries of Senators for short terms and following appointments, and that the amendment 'makes no difference whatever in the pay scale of any Senator and involves no additional obligation on the part of the Government (79 Congressional Record, 1057). It is reasonable to infer from this statement that there was no intention to provide for overlapping payments to appointees and their successors out of the regular appropriations for salaries, and that the general practice which had been followed under prior laws was to be continued, namely, that the salary of an appointee was to cease when that of his elected successor began.

"As a matter of fact, the first paragraph of the 1935 revision was to cease when that of his elected successor began.

"As a matter of fact, the first paragraph of the 1935 revision merely combined the first and fourth paragraphs of the 1934 law with no change in substance, while the second paragraph of the 1935 revision combined the substance of the second and fifth paragraphs of the 1934 law. Consequently, it would be unreasonable to place a different construction upon the 1935 combinations from that placed upon the separate provisions of the 1934 law. The third paragraphs of the 1934 and 1935 laws are identical, are the same in substance as the proviso added by the House in 1923 to Senate Joint Resolution 248, and have given rise to no dispute as to their meaning since the intent is clearly apparent. Further discussion of the changes made in 1935 is believed to be unnecessary in view of the detailed consideration that has already been given to the 1934 provisions which were replaced in form but not in substance.

"In conclusion, under the present law relating to the payment of

In substance.

"In conclusion, under the present law relating to the payment of salaries of Senators, the answer to the question whether the compensation of a person appointed to the Senate is to cease on the day that a person is elected to succeed him, or only when the person so elected qualifies as a Senator, will depend upon the happening of the various events referred to in the statute.

"If the election of the successor to the appointee takes place during a sine die adjournment of the Senate, the salary of the appointee is to cease on the day of such election.

"If the election of the successor to the appointee takes place appointee is to cease on the day of such election.

"If the election of the successor to the appointee takes place during a session of the Senate, the salary of the appointee is to cease either (1) on the day the successor qualifies, if such qualification takes place before the sine die adjournment of the Senate, or (2) on the day on which the Senate adjourns sine die, if the successor does not qualify before that day.

"APPENDIX

"In the course of the debate in the Senate on February 3 and 4, 1914, with respect to the right of Mr. Frank P. Glass to a seat in the Senate under an appointment by the Governor of Alabama, various views were expressed concerning the time when the seventeenth amendment was to become operative and the meaning of its provisions. As one of the main questions at issue was the authority of the Governor to appoint Mr. Glass in view of the fact that after the ratification of the amendment the Legislature of Alabama had not by law authorized the Governor to make appointments to fill vacancies in the Senate, there was considerable discussion about the provisions of the second paragraph of the amendment which reads as follows:

"'When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointment until the people fill the vacancies by election as the appointment until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.'

"It is believed that the views then expressed with respect to the meaning and effect of the above provision should be given great weight not only because the debate took place so soon after the ratification of the amendment, but also because many of the participants had been in the Senate while the proposed amendment was being considered and prior to its submission to the States. The following excerpts from the speeches on February 3 and 4, 1914, indicate that Senators who favored the seating of Mr. Glass as well as those who were opposed to doing so were in agreement as to the meaning of that part of the seventeenth amendment which relates to the duration of temporary appointments, and it is apparent that in the opinion of those Senators at least a temporary appointment was to terminate under the Constitution on the day that the successor to the appointee was elected.

Congressional Record, and all italics have been supplied:

"'Mr. Walsh. * * This Senate cannot seat Mr. Glass now upon the theory that Alabama has no law under which an election can be held and then oust him next fall in favor of a man who is elected under the same state of the law, unless it is prepared to proceed upon the easy philosophy of the statesman who asked, "What is the Constitution among friends?" It is said that he will sit only until an election is held, but the very basis of the argument upon which his right is asserted is that there is no law under which an election can be held (p. 2794).

"Mr. Clapp. Is it not the correct construction that it provided both means; that is, the executive could call an election, but the legislature could authorize the executive to fill the vacancy by appointment until the election?

"Mr. Bradley. There is no doubt about that construction of the amendment. * * Under the new amendment the people elect the Senator; under that amendment the people supply a vacancy in his office by like election. Under the old constitution the legislature elects the Senator, and under that constitution the legislature, in case of vacancy, elects his successor. Under both systems the Governor may appoint temporarily (p. 2804).

"'Mr. Bradley. * * the State, in the first place, through its legislature, can authorize the Governor to appoint until the people hold an election, and that election must be held as directed by the legislature of the State, not as directed by the Congress of the United States (p. 2805).

(p. 2808).

"'Mr. Reed. I was discussing the proposition that the first provision we are met with is that there shall be an election by the people, and I had come to the further proposition that there was an exception to that method. What is it?

"'When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of the state of the the Senate the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies."

"I ought to say again that at this point and up to this point it is purely and absolutely an election by the people. Every original election must be by the people. Every election to fill a vacancy must be by the people. The express command is laid upon the Governor of a State to issue his writ of election and to call the people together and give them the opportunity which we sought to give them.

"There is but one way to avoid that method of selecting a Senator, to comply with the provision contained in the Constitution. Until you have complied with the qualifying provision there is no man who can sit in this body unless he holds his warrant by virtue of an election by the sovereign people of a State. That one way

"Now, note that language. The legislature may direct."

"Now, note that language. The legislature empowers the executive to make temporary appointment until when? Until the next general election? No. Until the legislature shall assemble? No. For a period of 3 months or 6 months or a year? No. Until the term of office of the man who receives the temporary appointment shall have expired? No. It is until the people shall elect as the legislature may direct.

"If the legislature were to meet and confer the authority upon a Governor to appoint, and stop at that point, I do not believe he could make a valid appointment. I believe that in order that the Governor might have authority to make a valid appointment under a legislative act the legislature must give him the direct power to appoint and at the same time must provide that the people of that State shall have a chance to elect, and that the appointment must cease when that hour or day of election has arrived (pp. 2813–2814).

"'Mr. REED. * * What says the Constitution, if you under-

"'Mr. Reed. * * What says the Constitution, if you undertake to apply that to the seventeenth amendment:

"'Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointment until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct."

"That is to say, the legislature may meet; they may authorize the Governor to make a temporary appointment until the day of election rolls around, which they are to fix in the very law by which they give him this authority; and the appointment is until the election can be held, and no longer. But, says the statute of Alabama, even if we grant that it applies, or can be made to apply, to this case, the Governor shall appoint to fill the unexpired term of that office. The Constitution declares that he shall not have authority to appoint to fill an unexpired term; he shall only have authority to fill the office until the people elect, when it is expressly conferred. Elect whom? Elect a man whose office will begin at the end of the term? No; the Governor shall merely make a temporary appointment to be held until the people shall elect somebody to take the place of the man he temporarily appointed; * * * no Governor could appoint until the legislature had expressly authorized him to appoint, and then only for such time as should intervene between the date of the appointment and an election to be held in accordance with the provisions of the very law that confers upon the Governor the power visions of the very law that confers upon the Governor the power of appointment.

"The Constitution says that the Governor cannot appoint unless the legislature has given him authority to appoint, and then he can appoint only until such time as the people shall elect in accordance with the provisions of the statute (p. 2816).

"Mr. Bankhean. If the Senator from Missouri has read the opinion of the Governor's legal advisers, he has seen that they state that under the statute the Governor has the unquestioned right to appoint, but when he undertakes to appoint for the unexpired term he comes in conflict with the constitutional amendment; and in that case the appointee must give place to his successor when the successor is elected by the people of Alabama, which may be next week or next month or 2 months from now.

"'As soon as an election can be held, if there is any law in Alabama to authorize it—and I am authorized to say that it will be done very soon—and the person elected comes here with the certificate of the to authorize it—and I am authorized to say that it will be done very soon—and the person elected comes here with the certificate of the Governor that he has been elected by the people of Alabama, he will take his seat in the Senate and Mr. Glass will walk out (p. 2816).

"Mr. SUTHERLAND. * * * Under the provisions of the seventeenth amendment clearly no Governor can be authorized by the act of the legislature to appoint any person to fill the unexpired term; or the legislature, rather, can only authorize him to appoint under the authority of the seventeenth amendment, which reads:

""That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct."

"'The constitutional provision contemplates that the appointment shall be made only until at some convenient time before the expiration of the term the people can act; and the legislature is not permitted by the terms of the constitutional provision to authorize the Governor to appoint for any longer period (p. 2867).

"'Mr. Sherman. * * The express power contained in the proviso here limits the mandatory order of this clause of the amendment only so far as enumerated. It limits it in a single thing and in none other. It provides:

""That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointment until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct."

"The only thing this does with the mandatory power in the body of the second clause of the amendment is to provide that the legislature of the State may suspend the mandatory direction to the

"The only thing this does with the mandatory power in the body of the second clause of the amendment is to provide that the legislature of the State may suspend the mandatory direction to the Governor in the body of the clause. That orders the executive to issue an immediate writ for an election. It provides that the legislature has that discretionary power to fix the time of an election, and pending that a Governor may appoint to fill the vacancy if the legislature confers that power upon him. It provides that the legislature of a State may fix the time when an election shall be held by the people to fill a vacancy, and the time the Governor may appoint is measured by the time when they authorize him to make the appointment and the time when they require an election to be held to fill that vacancy. That period between those two intervals of time constitutes the sole power of an executive to make a temporary appointment. make a temporary appointment.

"The full term or a vacancy is to be filled but one way, and that is by a popular election, unless a State statute confers on a Governor power to make a temporary appointment to fill a vacancy. No question arises except on vacancies. No question arises even on the vacancy if the body of the second clause of this amendment be considered, where it provides that writs shall be issued by the executive of the State. It is only upon the proviso on which the contention arises for a different construction. In the proviso it is said that the Governor of the State may appoint, if he is given power by an act of the legislature, until such time as the legislature shall direct an election (p. 2870).

"Mr. POMERENE. * At the time this amendment was being discussed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Bristow] he made, in part, this explanation on May 23, 1911:

""The Constitution as it now reads, referring to vacancies in the Senate, says: 'And if vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies."

""Instead of that, I provide the following: When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such tive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies."

"'"Which is exactly the language used in providing for the filling of vacancies which occur in the House of Representatives, with the exception that the word 'of' is used in the first line for the word 'from,' which, however, makes no material difference.

"'"Then my substitute provides that—'the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct."

"'"That is practically the same provision which now exists in the case of such a vacancy. The Governor of the State may appoint a Senator until the legislature elects. My amendment provides that the legislature may empower the Governor of the State to appoint a Senator to fill a vacancy until the election occurs, and he is directed by this amendment to 'issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.'

""That is, I use exactly the same language in directing the Governor to call special elections for the election of Senators to fill vacancies that is used in the Constitution in directing him to issue writs of election to fill vacancies in the House of Representatives."

"So far as my knowledge goes, the construction which the Senator from Kansas placed upon the language of this amendment as submitted by him was not challenged by any Senator on the floor of this Chamber (p. 2875).

"Mr. Barsrow. Mr. President, just a word. During the 3 years this amendment was under consideration, I do not believe it ever occurred to the mind of a Senator on this floor that after its adoption an appointment could be made to the Senate by any Governor, unless it were a temporary appointment pending an election. If every Senator had been individually asked for an expression of opinion at that time as to what this language meant, I do not believe there would have been a single Senator who would not have said that vacancies in the Senate would, after the adoption of the amendment, be filed exactly as vacancies in the House are filled, by an election, provided, of course, that in the meantime the legislature of a State had made provision whereby, pending that election, the Governor could make an appointment to fill a vacancy, so that every State would have its quota (p. 2876).

"Mr. Brandegee. * * So that I say that the passage by the Legislature of Alabama of an enabling act conferred upon the chief executive of the State authority to make this appointment until

"Mr. Brandegee. * * * So that I say that the passage by the Legislature of Alabama of an enabling act conferred upon the chief executive of that State authority to make this appointment until the people can elect is as necessary a part of the title of the appointee who applies to be seated as anything in the Constitution could be (p. 2880).

"Mr. Clark of Wyoming. * * * Under the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution we, in effect, take away from the Governor that right to appoint, but we confer upon the Governor another right to appoint, to wit, the right to appoint temporarily, when the legislature shall so direct by specific law, until the people themselves shall have voted under the operation of this amendment. So it seems to me the right to appoint under the seventeenth amendment is a different thing from the right to appoint under the old Constitution (p. 2881).

authorized by the legislature, until an election can be held by the people (p. 2883).

"'** * In that same amendment they said, however, that if in any particular State the people believed it would be wise or prudent to invest their Governor with the power to make a temporary appointment, which at the outside would ordinarily last only for a period of 30 or 60 or 90 days, they were at liberty to do it; that each separate State is required to decide that question for itself' (p. 2884).

Brief in supplement to brief of legislative counsel, appearing above:

"MEMORANDUM RELATING TO ANNUAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR SALARIES OF SENATORS

"In connection with the payment of salaries of Senators, it has been customary for many years to appropriate, in the regular annual Legislative Appropriation Act, the exact amount required to pay two persons from each State for a period of 12 months at the pay two persons from each State for a period of 12 months at the current rate fixed by statute as compensation for Senators. In making such an appropriation the Congress is, of course, merely recognizing that each State is entitled to two Senators, as provided by the seventeenth amendment, and carrying out the provision of section 6 of article I of the Constitution that "The Senators * * shall receive a compensation for their services, to be ascertained by law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States."

be ascertained by law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States.'

"Although the Constitution merely requires that compensation be paid to 'Senators,' this requirement has never been so strictly construed as to exclude the payment of compensation to Senators-elect who were elected to fill vacancies to which temporary appointments had been made. In some instances, also, payments have been made out of the regular appropriations to temporary appointees to the Senate instead of to their elected successors for the period between election day and the day when the latter took the oath of office as Senators. However, the fact that each regular appropriation is sufficient to pay but two persons from each State during a period of 12 months would seem to preclude using any part of any such appropriation for paying both the Senator-elect and his appointed predecessor for any period after election day. As a result, if any dispute arises as to which of the two persons should be paid for such period, it will be necessary to choose between them if the purpose for which the annual appropriation was made is to be carried out. The choice between the appointee and the Senator-elect in any such case will depend in the first instance upon what is provided in the compensation statutes with respect to payments, and in the absence of a clear and unambiguous statutory provision which requires the payment of compensation to the appointee until the Senator-elect takes the oath of office as a Senator, it has been customary recently to make the payment to the latter and this practice has been generally accepted as being proper. If both were paid during the same period it might well be said that the payment to one of them, at least, was merely an unauthorized gratuity, and in any such case a deficiency appropriation would have to be made in order to obtain sufficient funds to pay the Senators from the other States the full amount of their salaries.

"It should be noted, perhaps, that the existence of a statutory provision which auth of the Senator-elect instead of the appointee after election day, will not be conclusive on the question as to which of them is entitled to the office of Senator, since it has not been definitely determined by the courts whether the status of any such appointee as a Senator continues beyond the day his successor is elected. About all that can be said of any provision of that sort is that it indicates a definite intent not to pay both persons for the same period, although it may well be that those who enacted the provision were of opinion that the person for whom payment was provided was actually entitled to it under the Constitution.

"If payment was authorized to be made to the Senator-elect after election day and it was subsequently decided that he was entitled

stroying any claim which he might have for further compensation. It follows that if payment was authorized to be made to him after election day rather than to the Senator-elect, and the latter was held to be entitled to the office of Senator as soon as he was elected, any payment to the appointee beyond election day would in effect be a gratuity in spite of the fact that the statute provided for it. The Senator-elect in such case could not claim that his predecessor had been paid unlawfully, and his own claim for compensation between election day and the day he was sworn in, if he was not paid, would have to be based upon the fact that he was a 'Senator' during that period within the meaning of the compensation provision of the Constitution.

"On the other hand, if it should be decided that the appointee's status as a Senator continued under the Constitution until his elected successor was sworn in, he would be entitled to receive compensation until that time even though there was a specific conversion in the compensation statutes authorizing the payment of the Senator-elect. In such a case the latter rather than the appointee would have received a gratuity, although the payment was made in would have received a gratuity, although the payment was made in accordance with law.

"Conceivably, the Congress might provide for paying both an appointee and his elected successor between election day and the time the latter took the oath of office as a Senator, but this would be contrary to the customary practice as evidenced by the amounts regularly appropriated annually for salaries of Senators. However, if a provision for the payment of the two persons for the same period of time was in effect, the failure to pay either of them would give rise to a valid claim for compensation under the terms of the statute, and in that connection it would not be necessary to decide the constitutional question as to which person was entitled to the office of Senator. office of Senator.

office of Senator.

"It is also conceivable that under a strict construction of the Constitution the Congress might fail to provide for the payment of compensation to the elected successor of an appointee until the successor took the oath of office as Senator, since the Constitution merely provides that 'Senators' shall receive a compensation for their services to be paid out of the Federal Treasury. If such a limited construction of the Constitution should be upheld, it would be convex make no difference as far as his claim for it would, of course, make no difference, as far as his claim for compensation was concerned, whether the Senator-elect was held to be entitled to the office or not.

compensation was concerned, whether the Senator-elect was held to be entitled to the office or not.

"The failure of the Congress to provide for the payment of compensation either to the appointee or to his elected successor between election day and the time the latter took office as a Senator would necessarily involve a determination of the constitutional question in connection with a claim for compensation. In any such case it would not be a question of a right under the statute but whether either person was entitled to compensation under the Constitution in the absence of a statutory provision for the payment of compensation to him. The appointee would have to establish at least that his status of Senator continued until his elected successor was sworn in, and the Senator-elect would have to establish not only that he was entitled to the office of Senator from the day of his election but also that he was a "Senator within the meaning of the compensation provision of the Constitution and therefore entitled to be paid. It is unlikely, however, that a situation will arise in which the courts will be called upon to decide the constitutional question because there has been a failure to pay the appointee as well as the Senator-elect, and it is assumed that the present practice of appropriating enough each year to pay two persons from each State throughout the year will be continued.

"The case which is most likely to arise is one in which it is claimed that the appointee rather than the Senator-elect should be paid, but if provision was actually made for paying the latter it is difficult to see how the compensation statute itself could be attacked on constitutional grounds. If it should be decided that the appointee's status as a Senator continued beyond election day, payment of compensation to him would probably be required and made, but that would not necessarily invalidate the statute or the prior payments to the Senator-elect. If they were made in accordance with the statute, the payments to the Senator-elect could not be said to be unauthorized regardless of whether it was believed at the time the statute was enacted that payment was believed at the time the statute was enacted that payment was being provided for the person constitutionally entitled to it. "As the seventeenth amendment by its terms does not provide that a temporary appointee to the Senate shall hold office and be paid until the day his elected successor is qualified, the claim of such an appointee to payment of compensation as a Senator until that day arrives (in the absence, of course, of a definite and unambiguous statutory provision requiring such payment) must necessity be bested upon a broad interpretation of the provision in the ambiguous statutory provision requiring such payment) must necessarily be based upon a broad interpretation of the proviso in the second paragraph of the seventeenth amendment to the effect that the provisions of the State laws authorizing the making of temporary appointments to the Senate are to be completely controlling with respect to the duration of such appointments no matter what conditions such laws impose. If, for example, a State law should provide that the Governor could make a temporary appointment which would last until such time as the successor to pointment which would last until such time as the successor to pointment which would last until such time as the successor to the appointee was sworn in as a Senator, or until a specified day, the argument would be that the provisions of the State law would govern. However, this argument seems to disregard not only the spirit of the seventeenth amendment and the purpose for which it was adopted, but also the specific limitation in the amendment itself that the legislature of any State may empower its executive to make temporary appointments 'until the people fill the vacancies by election.'

"The fact that 30 States have in effect restricted the duration of "The fact that 30 States have in effect restricted the duration of such temporary appointments to the period between the making of the appointment and the election of the successor to the appointee would seem to indicate that the limitation contained in the amendment should not be disregarded. On the other hand, in 15 States the statutory provisions relating to temporary appointments to the Senate are apparently broad enough to permit an appointee to hold office for some period beyond the day his successor is elected, although it is believed that on an analysis of some of these provisions at least a different interpretation as to their scope might reasonably be reached. In any event, there is their scope might reasonably be reached. In any event, there is an apparent conflict between the provisions in the two groups of States, and it would seem that a definite solution might not be reached until an authoritative opinion has been rendered by the courts with respect to the seventeenth amendment.'

CONCLUSIONS OF THE COMMITTEE

It is the conclusion of the committee that under the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, reading in part, as follows:

"Provided that the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct," the term of service of a Senator appointed to fill a vacancy in an unexpired term ends on the day when his successor is elected by the people.

It is the further conclusion of the committee that under the act of Congress of February 13, 1935, in part, reading as follows:

"Provided that when Senators have been elected during a sine die adjournment of the Senate to succeed appointees, the salaries of Senators so elected shall commence on the day following their election," the compensation of the appointed Senator ends with the day of the election of his successor by the people. It is, therefore, the conclusion of the committee that Hon. George L. Berry, late a United States Senator from the State of Tennessee is not entitled to compensation after November 8, 1938.

PERMANENT STATUS FOR CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill amending the Civilian Conservation Corps Act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill of the Senator from Utah will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 1110) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1937, as amended, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the bill which I have just introduced will, if enacted into law, make a most successful recovery feature of the last 6 years a permanent institution. I refer to the Civilian Conservation Corps, which in popularity and utility perhaps has surpassed any of the other emergency services.

The amendment of the law which the bill proposes has been well considered both by its nominal author and some of his legislative associates, and by those charged with administration of the acts since 1933. There is no need here to recount the successes of the C. C. C. The activities of the corps have not escaped even the least observing, and few Senators, if any, have not an intimate knowledge of the working of the camps.

It will be recalled that the life of the C. C. C. has been extended until July 1, 1940. It then is not a desperate matter that its consideration be concluded in the first session of this Seventy-sixth Congress. It is, however, important that we keep abreast of all legislation, as none of us can foresee what momentous problems will rise to consume our time in the future. For this reason and others which shall appear, not the least of which is that the matter was made subject of a message from the President of the United States, I present my amendment at this time.

As prepared, the most important provision in the amendment is that it makes the Civilian Conservation Corps, as it stands, a permanent institution. Unless serious question is raised that is not now in contemplation, there need be no present debate on the advisability of this action. It would be a waste of words to argue the merits of having a C. C. C. in the permanent plan of American life. As a force for rescue, education, and national development it has no social equal. Therefore I shall not take time to defend the broader aspects of a program the efficiency of which is so well known to Senators.

Next, the amendment as prepared is designed to bring the Civilian Conservation Corps, excepting Reserve officers, enrollees, and unskilled labor, within the scope of civil service. This is a departure from the emergency service that has ample precedent in other emergency services which have grown to legislative manhood, and, like the first proposition, speaks for itself.

Finally, the amendment as prepared adopts an official seal, another natural development.

This, in short, is all I have to offer today for the purpose of launching a movement to make the C. C. C. permanent. Similar legislation has been offered in the House of Representatives.

At the risk of seeking to gild the lily, however, I take occasion to express the thought that this amendment does not represent the ultimate in C. C. C. perfection, and that thoughtful work might well be done to perfect the C. C. C. organization. We have before us a real opportunity. It seems almost irreverent to suggest that this organization has weaknesses, or might be strengthened in any way. In truth it would be an affront to Mr. Fechner and his associates to imply in the slightest degree that they have not performed what amounts to a social miracle. I am in dead earnest. The C. C. C. fairly shines with splendid-achievement. At least it would seem a miracle, though there are other places to bestow praise than upon the C. C. directorate proper. The War Department was ready, and set about its immense task with its customary calm and efficiency. War departments must not be caught by anything as mild as evolution, and it was not caught off guard. Those of us who saw the mobilization in 1917 and were witnesses to what took place in 1933, realize in the fullest degree the tremendous advance which our Army has made in this regard.

As for the Forest Service, it had a 10-year plan with better preparations than hope, and to this Service the coming of the C. C. C. was but an accidental fulfillment of a sober and studied desire.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator's bill provide for military training in the C. C. camps?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It does not.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why not?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Just because it does not provide for it. That question can be properly considered at another time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Personally, I think we ought to have military training in all the C. C. C. camps. It happens that they are potential bases for the training of soldiers. The enrollees have officers in charge of them, but the officers do not drill them.

I make that suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, that is a matter which will have to be considered when the proper time comes.

Of course, the Forest Service was ready. Success was instantaneous. Therefore, deliberation and comprehensive preparation did dominate even the earliest days of the C. C. C., however much a terse message from the President and a ready public response might have vitalized it. The grazing feature came later, of course, but with scarcely less preparation. The same thing might be said with equal truth of the 601 camps on State, National, and private forests.

At this point I may remind Senators who were present at the first meeting for the consideration of the C. C. C. proposal of an incident which took place at that meeting, to show how completely an idea has grown into something which no one expected.

There was discussion of how work might be done on the private forests. During that discussion I happened to point out that that was not the great problem we imagined, because I said, "If we teach 50,000 young men the vocation of reforestation, those men will find jobs for themselves, and in that way take care of the private forest lands."

What I want to point out is that as soon as I mentioned the fact of 50,000 men doing reforestation work in this country there was complaint and objection. We were told that our country would never stand for a movement of that kind, so large a movement, calling so many men to this type of service; yet, Mr. President, I must call attention to the fact that at one time we had nearly 600,000 men at work in this great institution.

The 355 Soil Conservation camps, the 38 drainage camps, the 33 Biological Survey camps, the 73 national parks or monuments camps, the 237 State parks camps, the 90 grazing camps, the 44 reclamation camps, and the 29 miscellaneous camps of today—all the services of which I have any knowledge—were fully ready to receive men and install camps in fulfillment of specific services which had been conceived of a long, long time in every case. It is well that we plan ahead. Sometimes the fulfillment comes faster than we may expect. Yet, as one who visited dozens of camps in the first year of their creation and who has been interested in the minutest details surrounding C. C. C. life, I should be smug and shirking were I not to analyze what appear to be points of potential development, and respectfully invite committee and floor amendments along some of the following lines:

First, there is the matter of an education for the C. C. boy. It is not a kindness to take a young man who had never finished the sixth or seventh school grade, remove him from a city in which he might with diligence obtain knowledge and credits from at least an evening school, and, instead, place him in a forest or its equivalent, thus delaying this opportunity. Again I hasten to give credit to the C. C. C. administrators for attending to this duty to the very best of their abilities; for we must recognize that, to quote the Director's annual report for 1938:

More than half the States have made arrangements to award elementary-school or high-school certificates to qualified enrollees. One State, Montana, has designated each C. C. C. camp as a technical high school for the accrediting of vocational training and related work.

Here, too, I must call attention to the practice in some of the camps, allowed under the law, of issuing certificates of proficiency when boys have finished certain activities. These certificates have been in very deed, time and time again, an "open sesame" to a job. This is testimony to the work of the organization. It also is testimony to further opportunity on a broader scale; for elsewhere in the report it is implied that the educational level of our C. C. C. boys is what I, as a former educator, would have to term very low.

Of 257,697 juniors selected and accepted in the C. C. C. for the fiscal year 1937, it appears that 156,283, or 60.3 percent, had finished only the elementary school or less. I mean that 60 percent of our boys had finished only the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, or eighth grades. A figure of 53.87 percent, or a substantial improvement, is reflected in the fiscal year 1938, yet the number was 136,711 out of a possible 253,776. This is a challenge to the C. C. C. organization and a challenge to Senators. More than half our C. C. C. boys will never get into high school or its equivalent unless the C. C. C. makes it available to them.

I am not complaining. I am merely pointing out the fact that when we turn to do what was done, so far as this body of Congress was concerned, a year ago—making this institution a permanent institution—we want to have some basis for its permanency. Shall we rest the C. C. C. upon the basis of education? Shall we rest it upon the basis of conservation? Shall we rest it upon the basis of military training, as was suggested a moment ago by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally]? Shall we find what is the real need and what is the key to this need and place the C. C. C. upon that basis?

Personally, I believe that the greatest influence the C. C. C. has is a human influence, and that in doing that it gives to hundreds of thousands of our young men an opportunity for some social experiences of which they have been deprived, because they never had the opportunity to go to a high school or a college, to go into the Army or into the Navy, or to do any work in which they are taught teamwork with other men, which, of course, is the very essence of any democratic principle. Therefore, in the establishment of a permanent institution it might be well for us to think of the various bases upon which we wish to rest it and make that institution what the American public want it to become.

The task is very great and must be recognized as such. I recommend that studies be made and careful means be developed to make education in the C. C. C. a universal opportunity. The C. C. C. may be in a position to struggle through on its own initiative; certainly it has made great strides. But if it needs our help in making the proper legislative pattern, it should have it. Perhaps Senators will find the War Department should be relieved from its position as head schoolmaster to the boys, and the Commissioner of Education given a more direct responsibility. Proper hearing and consultation only will reveal the need, if any.

Every consideration should be given to a permanent policy for selecting junior enrollees. Humiliation of a youth as a condition precedent to acceptance for enrollment should prove, on study, to be unnecessary. A rule requiring extraction from relief rolls is at least harsh. I have previously written to President Roosevelt in expression of such an attitude, and obtained from this great humanitarian an expression of sympathy and willingness to share the problem. How may we determine otherwise need and fitness? I ask Senators to share the problem with us.

I am not altogether converted to the policy of an inflexible allotment of 10-percent enrollment of World War veterans. Past rushes of World War veterans for this opportunity would indicate the figure has been too low, that a higher percentage should have been admitted. We know that 10 to 20 years from now veterans will not need a quota as high as 10 percent. This figure should be fixed annually by the director on advice of many consultants, including experts from the Veterans' Administration and the War Department.

I have informal advices to the effect that the fair-haired favorites for military service with the C. C. C. are the Thomason Act boys; in other words, Reserve officers who have just completed 1 year of active duty with the Regular Army and are surely efficient. Also junior officers are favored because we can engage more of them for the same money. There is nothing, however, to prevent our consideration of dispension of these coveted posts.

Perhaps it is the Reserve officer who has had little active duty who needs it most, both for his own benefit and that of a Government which needs, if it needs Reserve officers at all, Reserve officers who have had experience in handling men. or boys, in this instance, and directing their welfare in camp, in short, the greatest training for the greatest number. Moreover, rank is relatively unimportant in a C. C. C. organization, for it is not a military institution, and if a captain, major, or colonel of Reserves wishes to do the work for a lieutenant's pay, he should have the opportunity for this leadership and service, and the Government might congratulate itself upon having the use of his matured judgments and sympathetic understanding. Nor should he, of course, be demoted from his better grade. It is possible that a C. C. C. camp commander's grade should be substituted for the bars and palm leaves, for after all it is not as lieutenants and captains that the leaders are functioning.

Finally, in this connection, it is wise to preserve the theory of an Army of the United States in the spirit of the National Defense Act, and intermingle Regular Army and perhaps the National Guard officers in this service.

These are nebulous thoughts, and there may be others, but all too important not to be taken into consideration when we face the responsibility for a permanent pattern for the Civilian Conservation Corps. Six years ago the whole proposition was nebulous, we had to act in haste, and a miracle, in all seriousness, was performed. We now are not faced with such hurry, and may not expect to be as lucky, or as inspired, in exercising snap judgments. I therefore urge deliberation and sober study. We have seen the camp idea in many countries. Some of these we do not want to emulate. We have creditably preserved the American ideal. Our task now is to develop it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I wish to say that I have been extremely interested in what the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. Thomas] has stated in reference to the Civilian Conservation camps, which are located the length and breadth of the United States. I desire to say to him that I am exceedingly regretful that I was not in the Chamber when he began his remarks, and thus did not have an opportunity to hear all he had to say in regard to this very fine organization. Unfortunately for me, I was detained between here and my office by a delegation of North Carolinians who required my attention. I make this remark in order that my constituents may know that I am on the job and to show them why I was a little late in arriving in the Senate Chamber. [Laughter.]

When I entered the Chamber I made inquiry of one of my colleagues as to the nature of the legislation which the junior Senator from Utah was desirous of having enacted which occasioned his addressing the Senate at this time. I learned that he was desirous of making the C. C. C. organization a permanent one.

In this connection I hope sincerely that if the C. C. c. organization shall be made permanent we will decide at the same time, or later, to bring about the enactment of a bill I have drafted, and which I shall present to the Senate for consideration, which embodies the idea of providing the boys who are engaged in work at the C. C. C. camps with military training. I know that this organization was hurriedly thrown together in the month, as I recall, of April 1933, at the suggestion of our great chief and our great President, the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt.

MEMBERSHIP AND FUNCTIONS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I introduce a bill for appropriate reference relating to the membership and functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I ask that the bill be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be properly referred and printed in the RECORD, and the statement submitted by the Senator from Utah will also be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1132) relating to the membership and functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be composed of five Commissioners, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, after the date of enactment of this act, but each Commissioner in office the date of enactment of this act, but each Commissioner in office on such date shall continue to serve as a Commissioner until June 1, 1939. The terms of office of the five Commissioners first taking office after the date of enactment of this act shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, one at the end of each of the first 5 years after such date. The term of office of a successor to any such Commissioner shall expire 7 years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, except that any Commissioner appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, shall be appointed for the remainder of such term. Upon the expiration of their terms of office Commissioners appointed after the date of enactment of this act shall continue to serve until their successors are appointed and have qualified. appointed and have qualified.
(b) Any Commissioner appointed after the date of enactment

(b) Any Commissioner appointed after the date of enactment of this act may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. Not more than three of such Commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party. No person in the employ of or holding any official relation to any common carrier subject to the provisions of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, or owning stock or bonds thereof, or who is in any manner pecuniarily interested therein shall enter upon the duties of or continue to hold office as a Commissioner. The Commissioners shall not engage in any other business, voca-tion, or employment. Each Commissioner shall receive an annual salary of $12,000, payable monthly. No vacancy in the Commission shall impair the right of the remaining Commissioners to exercise all the powers of the Commission.

SEC. 2. Upon the expiration of 180 days after the date of enactment of this act all powers, duties, and functions of such Commission, under part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, with respect to the following metters, shall cease and terminate:

to the following matters, shall cease and terminate:
(1) The initiation by the Commission of investigations, other than those relating to the installation, use, or maintenance of safety devices and systems.

(2) The issuance of certificates of present or future public convenience and necessity with respect to the extension by common carriers of any line, the construction of a new line, or the abandonment of a line or portion thereof.

(3) The ordering of any common carrier to construct, maintain, and operate switch connections with any lateral, branch line, or private sidetrack.

(6) The issuance and use by common carriers of scrip or inter-changeable mileage tickets.

(7) The granting of authority for any person to hold the position of officer or director of more than one common carrier.
(8) The routing of traffic.

(8) The routing of traffic.

SEC. 3. (a) Upon the expiration of 180 days after the date of enactment of this act, hearings may be held by such Commission for the purpose of determining whether any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice of a common carrier subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act is or will be unjust or unreasonable or unjustly discriminatory or unduly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of any of the provisions such part, but such hearings shall be held only after a complaint made as provided in section 13 of such part I has been filed with the Commission.

(b) If, after a full hearing upon such complaint, the Commission shall determine that such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice is or will be unjust or unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory or unduly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of part I of such act, the Commission shall make an order that the common carrier concerned shall cease and desist from such violation to the extent to which the Commission finds the same does or will exist.

SEC. 4. All acts or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the first section of the bill abolishes the existing 11-member Interstate Commerce Commission and establishes a new Commission consisting of only 5 Commissioners, but it is provided, however, that the Commissioners now serving as members of the Commission shall continue in that capacity until June 1, 1939, on which date the new Commission shall take office. The new Commissioners first taking office are to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for terms of from 1 to 5 years as designated by the President at the time of nomination. The successors of such Commissioners, however, are to be appointed in the same manner but for terms of 7 years, except that the appointee for any unexpired term shall serve only for the remainder of such term. The remaining provisions of this section relate to eligibility for the office of Commissioner, the salary, and the removal power, which makes no material change in the existing provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act.

Section 2 of the bill provides that upon the expiration of 180 days after the date the bill becomes law, all powers, duties, and functions of the Commission, under part 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act, relating to the following matters shall cease and terminate:

First. The initiation by the Commission of investigations, other than those relating to the installation, use, or maintenance of safety devices and systems. Existing law permits the Commission, of its own initiative, without a complaint, to institute an inquiry in any case as to any matter or thing concerning which a complaint could be made before the Commission, or concerning which any question might arise under any of the provisions of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, or relating to the enforcement of any of the provisions of part I of such act, except the making of orders for the payment of money. The effect of this provision in the bill is to have the Commission act only upon the filing of a complaint alleging a violation of the Interstate Commerce Act.

Second. The issuance of certificates of present or future public convenience and necessity with respect to the extension by common carriers of any line, the construction of a new line, or the abandonment of a line or portion thereof.

Third. The ordering of any common carrier to construct, maintain, and operate switch connections with any lateral, branch line, or private sidetrack.

Fourth. The determination and prescribing of any rate, fare, or charge to be observed by any common carrier, or any classification, regulation, or practice affecting any rate, fare, or charge, to be followed by any common carrier in connection with the transportation of passengers or property. The effect of this provision is to restrict the Commission to action only upon complaint as to the reasonableness or discriminatory nature of any rate, fare, or charge or any classification, regulation, or practice affecting any rate, fare, or charge of a common carrier, in connection with the transportation of passengers or property. This provision of the bill makes the action of the Commission in such matters similar to that authorized by the original Interstate Commerce Act.

Fifth. The suspension of the operation of any new schedule of rates, fares, or charges, or any new classification, or any new regulation or practice affecting any rate, fare, or charge, or deferring the use of any such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice.

Sixth. The issuance and use by common carriers of scrip or interchangeable mileage tickes.

Seventh. The granting of authority for any person to hold the position of officer or director of more than one common carrier.

Eighth. The routing of traffic.

Section 3 of the bill relates to the jurisdiction of the Commission with respect to holding hearings for the purpose of determining whether any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice of a common carrier is or will be unjust or unreasonable or unjustly discriminatory or unduly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act. Such hearings are to be held only after a complaint has been filed with the Commission for such purpose. The Commission now has the authority to initiate investigations and hold hearings on such matters without a complaint being previously filed.

Section 4 of the bill repeals all acts or parts of acts which are in conflict with the provisions of the bill.

FOREIGN POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES—OPERATIONS OF STABILIZATION FUND

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution for appropriate reference, and should like to say in connection therewith that recent developments show how little the American people are being permitted to know about the conduct of their foreign policy.

One of the most important tools in the conduct of foreign relations is the $2,000,000,000 fund which is used by the Secretary of the Treasury to buy and sell foreign money. Can one imagine any greater power than that of juggling a foreign nation's currency? It actually means that the costs of all the necessities of life may be raised or lowered. Improperly used, this power could make us the most hated nation on earth. There is no precedent in history for taking such liberties with the internal affairs of other nations with whom we are at peace.

Our Government does not divulge the use to which this vast fund has been put. I am therefore introducing a joint resolution requiring Secretary Morgenthau to report as to the manner in which this money has been used, with a complete statement of accounting. Public business should be publicly conducted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts will be received and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 55) to promote peace for the United States by requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to report on the operations of the stabilization fund, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

AMENDMENT TO FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WALSH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 2868, the first deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place, under the heading "Department of Agriculture", insert the following:

"FEDERAL SURPLUS COMMODITIES CORPORATION

"FEDERAL SURPLUS COMMODITIES CORPORATION

"Fish and shellfish: Of the funds available to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, $3,000,000 shall be used by such Corporation for the purpose of diverting surplus fish (including shellfish) and the products thereof from the normal channels of trade and commerce in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to extend the time for purchase and distribution of surplus agricultural commodities for relief purposes and to continue the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation,' approved June 28, 1937, as amended."

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 57) authorizing the Secretary of War to cause a completion of surveys, test borings, and foundation investigations to be made to determine the advisability and cost of putting in a small experimental plant for development of tidal power in the waters in and about Passamaquoddy Bay, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such examinations, reported it without amendment.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES—COUNTING OF ALIENS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have today reintroduced a proposal to amend the Constitution of the United States so that when apportioning Representatives in the National House of Representatives aliens who have not completed their naturalization shall not be counted.

The Constitution now provides that in apportioning Representatives among the States, the whole number of persons shall be counted, excluding only Indians who are not taxed. The effect of that provision is to give States with large alien populations additional representation in the popular branch of Congress, at the expense of those States whose population is largely made up of native-born and naturalized citizens.

According to the latest census figures, there are some 14,-000,000 foreign-born persons in the United States. Of these nearly 8,000,000 are naturalized citizens. The latter would be counted if the amendment I am proposing should be submitted to the States and should be ratified.

More than 1.000.000 of these foreign-born who have taken out first papers would not be counted under the terms of my amendment until they have taken out final citizenship papers. After that they would be counted the same as native-born Americans.

The census also shows some 4,500,000 foreign-born who have made no move toward becoming citizens, plus one-half million carried in the census reports as having no citizenship records at all.

In other words, there are about 6,000,000 foreign-born in this country, not citizens, who are counted in apportioning Representatives in Congress. In one State alone-New Yorkthere are approximately 1,500,000 foreign-born persons who are not citizens, but who are allowed representation in Congress. If my amendment were a part of the Constitution, admittedly that State would have probably four fewer Representatives in Congress. Those four seats would very properly go to other States. I may mention in passing that New York State, with such a large foreign-born, unnaturalized alien population, does not allow those persons to be counted in apportioning members of their own State legislature, or assembly, thereby admitting the injustice of basing representation upon foreign-born persons unless and until they have become citizens. A few other States would be similarly affected.

I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate today to discuss this proposal at greater length. It seems to me so perfectly plain that representation should be based upon citizenship as not to require extended argument. Later in the session, when the proposal comes before the Senate—and I hope it will come with a favorable committee report—I shall discuss it more at length. I hope Senators will take occasion to study the merits of this proposal and vote according to their best judgment after such study.

I think it is well to keep in mind that we are spending billions of dollars to provide an adequate national defense and to protect ourselves from the attack of enemies from without and absolutely overlooking the possibility of enemy aliens within our borders. Many of them are active in various un-American activities, working and boring from within.

Let me add, too, that I favor the bill now before Congress which would cancel citizenship of aliens advocating principles such as communism, fascism, and nazi-ism. There is no place in our Nation for any man who does not subscribe to the doctrines embodied in the Constitution and laws of the United States.

(See Senate Joint Resolution 54, introduced today by Mr. CAPPER, which appears under the appropriate heading.)

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF-CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am somewhat confused as to the order of business under which we are now proceeding. If we are still proceeding under the morning hour, I should be very anxious to present a report for immediate consideration. Is this the time to do it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has passed the point of reports of committees.

Mr. ADAMS. I submit the conference report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) to provide additional appropriations for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consid-

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand from the reading of the conference report that all the persons now employed by the W. P. A., or by any of the agencies paid for out of this appropriation, although they are known to have been lifelong American citizens, must make affidavit that they are American citizens before they may continue work.

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. It strikes me that that is rather a hardship on 3,000,000 persons, all of whom, except 30,000, are known to be American citizens.

Mr. ADAMS. I will explain the situation to the Senator. The joint resolution, as it came from the House, contained a flat provision that no relief should be given to any alien. The General Accounting Office said that if that provision were continued in the joint resolution, the General Accounting Office would require proof of citizenship by official records before any money could be paid to a citizen. The Senate struck out that provision and restated the provision in the existing law. This provision was inserted in an effort to reach an agreement with the House, so that all that would have to be presented would be the affidavit of the individual himself, and there would be no obligation to provide official records, such as birth certificates or naturalization certificates.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suppose from the parliamentary standpoint the Senate had to make some compromise. However, it seems to me it is quite a hardship to require 3,000,000 persons, all except a few thousand of whom are known to be American citizens, who have lived in their communities practically all their lives, and who have voted, and whom everybody recognizes as citizens, to take the trouble to make affidavits and pay notaries public to acknowledge them in order that they may continue to obtain employment.

I am not criticizing the committee for the provision. It may be that in view of the House language it was necessary to do what was done. However, it is a hardship just the

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The situation confronting the conferees was as the Senator from Colorado has stated. Administratively it was extremely difficult for the Works Progress Administration to work under the provision that no alien could be paid, because that provision would have required the production of birth certificates. This modification provides that prima facie evidence is furnished by the production of an affidavit, and it can be worked out much more easily than the other provision. While only 30,000 persons are affected, at $1,000 a year each $30,000,000 of the appropriation is involved. I submit to the Senator from Kentucky that the Works Progress Administration can easily have affidavit forms printed and furnished to the employees.

Mr. ADAMS. The provision does not go into effect for

Mr. BYRNES. As the Senator from Colorado suggests, the provision will not go into effect for 30 days, so there will be ample time to obtain affidavits. If the affidavit form is printed and furnished there will be no hardship, but the Congress will be enabled to accomplish what it has been trying to accomplish, and that is to prevent the expenditure of $30,000,000 of this fund to aliens.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to ask the Senator another question. From the report of the conference committee I know that the Senate yielded and eliminated one of the amendments which I offered and which was agreed to, making it a violation of the law to solicit contributions from or to assess employees paid by any other appropriation of Congress in addition to this particular relief measure.

I will say to the Senator that my object in offering my amendment was to protect thousands of road hands in this country who are working on Federal road projects, one-half the cost of which is paid by the Federal Government, but over whose appointment the Federal Government has no jurisdiction whatever. I wanted to protect them from the pernicious and wicked practice of being assessed a percentage of their wages in order to raise a campaign fund for some candidate for office. I happen to know of instances in which old-age pension agents appointed by State governments, not by the Federal Government-although half their compensation and half the pensions are being paid out of the Treasury of the United States-were commandeered, assessed, and solicited. If they did not respond they lost their positions, and there was nothing the Federal Government could do about it.

Unemployment insurance under the Social Security Act is financed altogether by the Federal Government, although the appointments to administer the law are made by local authorities over whom the Federal Government has no jurisdiction whatever. There are many others besides these three groups. In the case of unemployment insurance and old-age pensions, financed in part and sponsored by the Federal Government, the Federal Government does not even reserve the right to pass upon the qualifications of anybody who administers the law. All over the Nation men who are working upon Federal highways, half the cost of which is matched by State appropriations, are left without any protection from the exercise of coercion and intimidation, and from the forcible retention of a part of their compensation in order that campaign contributions may be collected from them. I know instances in which the pay checks of men working upon the roads were cashed by the authority which appointed them. A certain percentage was taken out, and the balance was delivered to the employees.

The object I had in mind in offering my amendment was to protect those groups from the very thing from which we are seeking to protect W. P. A. employees. I think it is unfortunate that in the conference report we have left these persons without any protection whatever, to be the victims of any local authority which desires to levy assessments upon them.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. HAYDEN addressed the Chair. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado has the floor. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ADAMS. I had yielded to the Senator from Kentucky. If the Senator from Kentucky is through, I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator from Kentucky has said. An abundance of evidence was presented to the Sheppard committee describing the very abuses which the Senator from Kentucky describes. I think the recommendations of that committee should suggest legislation to cover the situation of which the Senator complains. He is correct in his statement of the abuses.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I hope that matter will be taken care of in any permanent legislation which we may enact. I do not know when that legislation will be enacted. There is no way to prophesy as to that. Thousands upon thousands of men who are engaged in the administration of Federal laws are subject only to local appointment, and the local appointing authority is not in any way subject to removal or punishment by the Federal Government for engaging in the practices I have mentioned. The men working upon such projects are just as deserving and just as worthy of protection as are men who work upon projects under the W. P. A. or any of the agencies cared for in the joint resolution.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. I should like to make an observation in connection with any possible permanent legislation. The language written into the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky would not fit the road employees he mentions. I will tell the Senator why. Under the Federal Aid Highway Act a State must do the work itself. The men are paid from State appropriations. After the work is done, if the work meets the Federal standard, the Federal Government reimburses the State for a portion of the cost of the highway. So, technically, anyone employed on a Federal-aid highway project, recognized as such, is paid wholly from State funds. Ultimately the State will be reimbursed for its expenditures.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is a matter of administration. Mr. HAYDEN. No; that is the way the law now reads.

Mr. BARKLEY. Could not the Federal Government advance the money upon a project in which Federal funds are matched by the State, so that simultaneously the two funds would come together?

Mr. HAYDEN. In truth and in fact that is not done, and would not be done. The Senator might think he was accomplishing a certain result, and not accomplish it at all. I am pointing out the facts so that the Senator will realize that in order to meet the situation which he describes we must draw a statute in the light of actual procedure. I agree that the situation of which the Senator complains is grave in many States.

Mr. BARKLEY. That may be true as to the road funds; but it is not true, I think, as to certain other agencies with respect to which the Federal Government puts up a certain percentage.

Mr. HAYDEN. In the case of social security, the Government provides all the money. We know there is no cooperation in that field.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. HAYDEN. In my judgment, if the amendment of the Senator had been adopted, it would not apply to road workers under the present state of the law.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I should like to make an explanation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall be very happy to have the Senator make an explanation of the conference report. I had intended to ask him about one particular amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, in reference to this particular amendment I wish to give not my own explanation but that which prevailed in the conference committee. The conferees felt that they were dealing with legislation affecting relief limited to 434 months. They doubted the wisdom of enacting general criminal legislation having no relationship whatever to the question involved in the joint resolution.

Then, as to the particular amendment, waiving the matter of the propriety of general criminal legislation on a measure of this kind, the amendment is of very grave importance, and it was felt that it ought not to be put into the joint resolution without carefully considering the consequences which would

I followed humbly and faithfully last June the arguments of my distinguished leader and voted with him against the so-called Hatch amendment, for which I received very severe censure on the part of many people in my State. I tried to go along with the leader in this instance, but his movements have shifted too rapidly for the conference committee, and I think that the amendment went beyond what the Senator from Kentucky desired it should accomplish.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. My movements have not shifted at all; I entertain the same views now that I entertained then, and I have reiterated them over and over again. At that time I did not believe, and I do not now believe, the W. P. A. workers ought to be segregated into a separate class and dealt with politically in a different fashion from the way in which we should want to deal with all employees of the Federal Government or employees whose compensation is paid out of the Federal Treasury.

I grant that the amendment which I offered, and which was adopted, might be subject to the interpretation that some Senators and others have suggested, that under that language even Jackson Day banquets could not be held and the suggestion made to any Government employee that he should buy a ticket for such a banquet. I think that certainly would be a strained construction of the proposed law. If banquets are given in honor of Andrew Jackson, and if, incidentally, some of the profits made out of them go to pay the deficit in some political party's treasury, it does not seem to me that that would be covered by a provision preventing the solicitation of funds for the purpose of controlling an election. But, be that as it may, my position is that W. P. A. workers are human beings, just the same as everybody else; they are not separable into a group by definition, by inclination, or by character; they are plain, ordinary American citizens, and they ought to be treated as such; they ought to be treated like everybody else; and, while we were undertaking to protect them from the vicious practice of coercion and intimidation and assessment, my desire was that we cover all such practices, whether indulged in by a Federal officer under the control of the Federal Government or by somebody else who is not a Federal officer but is spending Federal money appropriated by Congress to carry on certain work.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I do not think it is necessary to go into a discussion of that question, because there is a decided difference between the situation of the W. P. A. worker whose livelihood, whose bread and butter, whose shelter, and whose clothes are dependent upon the Federal employees distributing relief, and that of a United States Senator or a United States marshal or a collector of customs. What we sought was to say that no one should in any way seek to use the power he has over the bread and butter of a relief worker to control or influence his vote. That is thoroughly pertinent to the relief joint resolution.

The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky goes so far that no person, regardless of his holding office or not, could solicit or be interested or concerned in soliciting a contribution from any person holding any office or in employment under the Federal Government for the furtherance of any campaign, any political party, or any candidacy. The conference committee felt that the division between the political parties of the United States is a matter of great and fundamental principle. The parties hold their national conventions; they issue declarations of principle; and we go out and argue those principles. In order that we may present our case, it is necessary that there be radio time purchased; it is necessary that space be provided in the newspapers; it is necessary that circulars be printed; it is necessary that public meetings be held: it is necessary that traveling expenses be paid. This amendment would forbid, under penalty, the State chairman in my State asking me to make a contribution to the Democratic State central committee for the purpose of carrying out or seeking to render successful the principles of the Democratic Party, and the same situation would apply to others. We were unwilling, as a conference committee, to say that no man holding office should be permitted—and that is what it amounts to-to make a contribution for the furtherance of the principles for which he stands.

If it were merely a matter of jobs, that would be one thing, but if we are justified in what we say on Jackson Day, we are interested in the furtherance of great public questions; we are advocating fundamental principles; and yet we are being told by this provision that no man active in doing what some of us regard as patriotic work shall be permitted to suggest to a United States Senator, or to a Member of the House of Representatives, or to a collector of internal revenue, or anyone else, that he make a contribution to further the things in which he believes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not quarreling with the Senator about the action taken, but it is unfortunate that the conference committee, if they thought the language of the amendment went too far, did not try to work out some language which would cover the situation to which I have called attention. Certainly the amendment itself cannot be subject to the interpretation that anybody, Senator, or any other Federal officeholder, could not voluntarily make a contribution to any cause. There is nothing in the amendment that refers to voluntary contributions.

Mr. ADAMS. No; but the Senator has been in politics sufficiently long to know that one does not get very far by merely putting a voluntary contribution box at some place and waiting for people to come along and make deposits.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have never gotten very far in that way, whether contributions were voluntary or otherwise.

Mr. ADAMS. No; and I have also paid my own expenses. Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator will also agree, I think, that the conferees were of the opinion that, while it might be desirable to provide a remedy for the situation of which the Senator from Kentucky complains, at the same time we did not want to do something that would bring about the situation referred to by the Senator from Colorado; that a committee of the Senate, after investigation, could devise some language which might accomplish what the Senator from Kentucky has in mind; that we should not delay the conference report on the relief joint resolution which must be acted upon within the next day or two, in order to assure the Works Progress Administration that they will have the funds necessary on the 7th of February; and that at some other time the Congress can go into the question.

Mr. ADAMS. I now yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, when the joint resolution was before the Senate for consideration, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl] offered an amendment providing an appropriation of $15,000,000 for the direct relief of those in need. The Senator from Idaho is detained today because of illness. I should like to know what disposition was made of that amendment?

Mr. ADAMS. The amendment of the Senator from Idaho was included in the report of the conference committee. It was approved by the conferees.

Mr. McNARY. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, do I understand correctly that the conferees have reported a disagreement with respect to amendment No. 9?

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What recommendation, if any, do the conferees make with respect to that amendment?

Mr. ADAMS. We report to the Senate a disagreement as to amendment No. 9. That amendment is not included in the conference report.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I move that the conferees be instructed to insist upon amendment No. 9, with an amendment to substitute for the language contained in the original House bill and designated in the print as amendment No. 9 the language which I now send to the desk.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that amendment No. 9 is not involved in the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair may state that first the conference report must be adopted, and, after that, the Senate may take action with regard to only amendments which are in disagreement.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, I submit a further parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand correctly that the only matter which is now before the Senate is the question of agreeing to the matters upon which the conferees have agreed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is all that is brought before the Senate by the conference report.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to make a further parliamentary inquiry. In what manner will it be possible for the Senate to consider amendment No. 9 in order that the Senate may properly instruct its conferees, if it so desires to do?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is under the impression that the only action which may be taken by the Senate with regard to an amendment in disagreement is to ask for a further conference on it; and if the Senate asks for another conference, it may instruct its conferees either to recede from the amendment or to insist on the amendment. The Chair does not believe that at this time, when the joint resolution is in conference, the Senate may adopt an instruction to write a different amendment from that which was adopted by the Senate. On the other hand, there being only one provision on that subject, and that being in the joint resolution as passed by the House, the conferees would have great liberty in rewriting the language of that section.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I understand, of course, that a parliamentary question is involved in the presentation of the matter which I desire to present; but what I am seeking to develop now is, what the parliamentary status would be if I should surrender the floor, and if the report which has been presented should be adopted. Would it then be in order to move to instruct the conferees?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the adoption of the report will not foreclose action by the Senate with regard to the amendment in disagreement.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, would it be within the parliamentary rule for me, immediately after the disposition of the conference report—which, I assume, will be adopted—to rise and make the motion I have just made; namely, to instruct the conferees with respect to amendment numbered 9?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will be recognized by the Chair for the purpose of making any motion he may see fit to make with regard to the amendment in disagreement. As to the ruling the Chair will make on any point of order, that is a matter for future determination.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course I am not asking the Chair to rule now. I merely desire to preserve my right to present the matter after the conference report shall have been acted upon.

With that understanding, I will yield the floor at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Wyoming that I should like to be recognized after the report is adopted to move that the Senate insist upon its amendment in disagreement and that it request a further conference. That would open the way for whatever rights the Senator from Wyoming may have.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is acceptable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendment numbered 9 in the printed report and request a further conference with the House on that amendment and that the same conferees be appointed on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I move to amend the motion of the Senator from Colorado to the effect that the Senate ask for a further conference and insist upon the substitution for the language in the House measure of the language I have sent to the desk and which I ask may be now stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the language sent to the desk by the Senator from Wyoming.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That not later than 30 days following the approval of this joint resolution the Works Progress Administration shall so determine and fix the number of hours per month of workers employed upon Works Progress projects that the monthly security wage for workers shall not be lower in any area than that paid to workers in that same occupation in areas of the same general type within the same security-wage region, regardless of variations in county population.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to raise the point of order, so that the matter may be considered?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator from Colorado will be good enough to withhold the point for just a moment in order that I may explain my position, then, of course, I shall be very glad to yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I offer this amendment in this way at this time because, as the proceedings of the conferees have been reported to me, there is very grave danger that the provision now in our work-relief law protecting the prevailing rate of wages may be seriously impaired.

The conferees, in considering the difference between the two measures—the Tarver amendment and the amendment of the Senate striking it out—almost decided upon this substitute language:

Provided further, That subject to the provisions of section 9 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, the appropriation herein made shall cease to be available after the expiration of 60 days from the date of the approval of this act, unless, in the meantime, by appropriate administrative order, the hourly rates of pay of relief employees of the same type and performing the same character of work in areas of the same general type are so fixed as to eliminate, as far as possible consistent with local economic conditions, differentials of more than 25 percent in the maximum rates of pay.

The only concession contained in that language to the prevailing rate of wages is the phrase "consistent with local economic conditions." It takes no expert in statutory construction to know that that language would not preserve the prevailing rate of wages.

The amendment which I have sent to the desk and which I explained at some length last Saturday does not affect the prevailing-rate rule. It preserves the prevailing-rate rule, but it abolishes discriminations for which there is no justification whatever in the monthly security wage which is paid in various parts of the country under exactly the same conditions. Therefore I feel that unless the Senate, in an emphatic way, indicates that it does not desire to do away with the differential in any other manner than by dealing with the total sum obtained during the month under the security wage, there will be serious danger of the loss of the prevailing-wage principle.

I now yield to the Senator from Colorado for the purpose of making the point of order he has indicated.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, after the Senator shall have concluded, I desire to take the floor in order to make an explanation.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. I inquire of the Senator from Wyoming whether the substance of the matter which he now asks to have incorporated in the instructions to the conferees is contained in either the joint resolution as passed by the House or the joint resolution as passed by the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The joint resolution as passed by the House deals with the subject of the compensation of relief clients. My amendment deals with the same subject. I believe there can be no question that it is altogether germane, if that is what the Senator from West Virginia has in mind.

Mr. NEELY. But has the substance of the Senator's amendment been adopted by either the House or the Senate?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It has not.

Mr. NEELY. Then, Mr. President, I submit that clearly a point of order would lie against the proposal.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. This suggestion may not have any effect on the parliamentary situation, but I am informed that this particular amendment is to go back to the House for a vote on whether or not the House will recede. Suppose the Senator's amendment is adopted, and the Senate conferees are instructed to insist on this amendment, and in the meantime the House votes to accept the Senate amendment, which strikes out the whole language, then where shall we be?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should say, obviously, that if the House by vote should recede from its position, there would be nothing in conference, and the whole matter would fall, and it would be settled upon the basis of the Senate's action by which the House language was stricken out.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I suggest that should the House take different action and reject the Senate amendment, the whole question then would be before the conferees.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; of course. Therefore I am now trying to instruct the conferees, because the chairman of the subcommittee, in charge of the bill, has asked the Senate to insist upon its amendment in disagreement and ask for a further conference with the House upon it. Therefore, I now desire to ask the Senate to instruct the conferees as to what they shall do.

I am told by some of the parliamentary experts here that the conferees of the Senate have greater power than has the Senate itself; that the conferees may do what they please, but that the Senate may not tell them what to do, which to my mind seems to be an utterly illogical position which cannot be sustained upon any basis of reasoning whatever.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senate amendment in dispute is simply an amendment striking out certain language of the House joint resolution. All that is involved is the question whether or not certain language in reference to differentials, which the House put in, shall be stricken from the joint resolution. I do not see any opening for instructions to conferees other than to recede or to insist at this time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ADAMS. In a moment. I wish to raise the point of order that the motion of the Senator from Wyoming is not in order; that it is not possible at this point to instruct the conferees to insist upon matter which is not before the conference committee; that the matter is to be sent to the other House for their action; that the one particular provision is not agreed to; and the question is as to agreement or disagreement with the action of the Senate.

I wish merely to add a word or two, if I may. The question of the prevailing wage, about which the Senator from Wyoming has speken—

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President-

Mr. ADAMS. Just a moment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wanted to ask a question before the Senator proceeded with his statement.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to conclude the statement I have tried to make. The question of the prevailing wage is involved. If the Senate amendment shall not be agreed to, and the House provision shall be agreed to, the prevailing wage will be repealed. To that extent the prevailing wage is involved.

I think it is also well, for the advice of the Senate, to have clear the distinction between the House language and that suggested by the Senator from Wyoming. The House language has to do solely with the fixing of the hourly rate of pay. It does not increase or decrease the aggregate monthly pay of any person upon the relief rolls. The amendment of the Senator from Wyoming deals with the aggregate amount of monthly pay, and does definitely involve a question different from the other. It is not included in any way within the substance of the House language.

For these reasons, Mr. President, it seems to me the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, now may I ask the Senator from Colorado the question which I rose to propound to him?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Why does the Senator say that the Senate cannot instruct its conferees?

Mr. ADAMS. I did not say the Senate cannot do so. My motion is that the Senate instruct the conferees to insist on the amendment. What the Senator seeks to do is to make a motion to reconsider the action of the Senate by which an amendment was adopted several days ago, but the time for reconsideration has passed, and the bill has gone to the other House. So that the Senator is now in substance seeking to have the vote of the Senate reconsidered under the guise of an instruction to the conferees as to merely the one question.

The Senator is overstating the situation when he says that apparently conferees have more authority than the Senate has. Conferees have no power in and of themselves. All they do is to make recommendations. If they make recommendations, the recommendations are not binding until they are approved both by the House and by the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator comes before this body and makes a motion asking the Senate to instruct him, and he says we may instruct him only in the manner in which the Senator wants to be instructed. I contend its conferees are the agents of the Senate. This body is the master of its own desires; it is the master of its own legislation; it is the master of its agents, even though those agents be conferees. There can be no logical explanation of the Senator's position; and that is why I interrogate him. The answer to my question is a long, round-about argument about something else. Why cannot the Senate say to a committee of the Senate, "This is the way we want it done"? Now let us have a logical answer to that question.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not imagine we could give an answer which the Senator from Wyoming would regard as logical.

We will have to do the best we can.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator does not know how agreeable I am.

Mr. ADAMS. The fact is that the joint resolution has passed the Senate, and the time for reconsideration has expired under the rules. The only instruction that can be given to the conferees is to stand by the action of the Senate or to recede. In other words, there are two provisions; one the House provision, one the Senate provision. There is no intermediate provision. Under their rules the two Houses can, upon recommendation of conference committees, adopt a modification within the extremes of the difference.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me ask the Senator a question at that point.

Mr. ADAMS. And the Senator's amendment is not within the extremes and it is not before the body.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is a different question.

Mr. ADAMS. Conference committees are appointed to adjust. The Senate cannot take the section involved, it cannot take any other section of the joint resolution at this time, and change it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator say that the conferees have the power to take the language of the House and alter it to suit their pleasure—

Mr. ADAMS. Of course not.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So long as it is a question between that language and the language of the Senate amendment, which was an amendment to strike out the House provision.

Mr. ADAMS. Senate conferees have no power whatever to alter the language in any bill. They have the right to submit to the Senate their recommendations as to an agreement between the bodies.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Now, the Senator is not answering the question. Do not the conferees have the power to change the language of a disputed item?

Mr. ADAMS. They do not of their own authority.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. To change it in the report?

Mr. ADAMS. They make a conference report to the Senate, and the Senate may agree or disagree.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. We are discussing a report, are we not?

Mr. ADAMS. No; we are not discussing a report. The report has been adopted.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The question before any group of conferees is the determination of what changes shall be made in a disputed item. Is not that correct?

Mr. ADAMS. Not exactly. The purpose is to seek to reach an agreement between two bodies which have not agreed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And then report?

Mr. ADAMS. And then report for the action of the two

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then the conferees in any particular case have the power to make such arrangement as seems in their judgment to be desirable, and report that to either body for acceptance by the body?

Mr. ADAMS. Within the limits of the disagreement.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Within the limits. The conferees in this particular case were considering, I am advised by one of the conferees, the language which I now read:

Provided further, That subject to the provisions of section 9 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, the appropriation herein made shall cease to be available after the expiration of 60 days from the date of the approval of this act unless in the meantime, by appropriate administrative order, the hourly rates of pay of relief employees of the same type and performing the same character of work in areas of the same general type are so fixed as to eliminate as far as possible, consistent with local economic conditions, differentials of more than 25 percent of the maximum rates paid.

Mr. President, the position I take is that it is within the power of the Senate to instruct its conferees that in lieu of this language, which they almost agreed upon—

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, no. The Senator should not say they almost agreed, because there was absolutely no agreement. What the Senator reads was submitted by one member of the conference, and was never even voted upon.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then I was misinformed. I was told it was voted upon. But it would have been legally possible for the conferees to have brought that in.

Mr. ADAMS. I am not saying that. Many things are considered by conferees which are outside of the scope of the conference, and are rejected for that reason.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The question comes down to a simple one, whether or not it is the desire of the Senate to instruct its conferees. I feel that in all logic and fairness the Senate has that power. But I do not desire to pursue the argument upon the point of order further and will be very glad to have the Chair rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question raised involves Senate amendment No. 9 in the joint resolution. The amendment of the Senate struck out the House language. The question in conference, or which will be in conference, is as to whether the language of the House provision shall be adopted by the conferees, or whether it is to be stricken out of the resolution or whether the conferees shall adopt compromise language, and report the compromise language to their respective bodies for approval or disapproval.

House Joint Resolution 83 was finally acted upon by the Senate some time last week. That final action was reported to the House, the House agreed to a conference, and conferees were appointed. The question, first, is as to the authority of the Senate in the matter, and, secondly, the authority of the conferees.

The Chair feels that all opportunity for legislation in connection with the House joint resolution ended with the passage of the measure in the Senate. The Senate has often held that it has the right to instruct its conferees—to instruct them, however, as to whether they shall insist upon a Senate amendment, or whether they shall yield on the amendment. The Chair does not believe that an instruction, after a measure has been finally passed by the Senate, can be put in the nature of new legislation which was not adopted by the Senate at the time the measure was under consideration.

The Chair does believe that the conferees have great latitude in a case such as this, because there was no provision adopted by the Senate, such as the provision that the Senate struck out of the House measure. In such cases it has been generally held in this body, and sustained, that the conferees may draft entirely new language, providing it does not go beyond the purpose of the measure or provision and is kept within the scope of the intended legislation. Whatever action the conferees take, however, must be taken by the managers not only on the part of the Senate but on the part of the House, acting as conferees. Their action is not final, of course. It must be agreed to by both the Senate and the House. The Senate has the opportunity to act in the matter when the conference report comes before it for consideration.

The present occupant of the chair feels that it would be improper practice to attempt by instructions to the Senate's conferees to legislate beyond the scope of legislation by either branch of the Congress. Therefore the point of order made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] is sustained.

Mr. McNARY. Question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] that the Senate further insist on its amendment numbered 9, and ask for a further conference.

LXXXIV-64

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore reappointed Mr. Adams, Mr. Glass, Mr. McKellar, Mr. Hay-DEN, Mr. Byrnes, Mr. Hale, and Mr. Townsend conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMERICA'S FOREIGN FOLICY-SECRECY OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I cannot possibly know what might be the reaction of others to such information as has been recorded before the Military Affairs Committee in executive session of late date. I think that what I say would perhaps to others seem to be a mere tempest in a teapot or, perchance, a mirage. But somehow I cannot re-frain from weighing things in the scale of experience. I cannot help placing the developments here in our own country alongside developments a long way from here, and believing that sometimes, at least, 2 plus 2 make 4.

National defense, foreign military purchases, secrecy, talk of quarantines and sanctions, not to speak of Premier Chamberlain's suggestion to Britain the other day that she might support American policies toward dictatorships and democracies, may have me seeing things that others would want to call mere ghosts. I only know, Mr. President, that I have been one of those who have many times wished that we might have known in 1917 what we have come to learn about 1917 since that time. I only know I should never forgive myself were I, a few months or a year or 2 years from now, to have to say that I was in any way responsible for the lack of knowledge of what seemed to be in the making in

To be charitable and to decide my doubts in a charitable way is my great desire. But I find myself at this moment in a most uncomfortable position. To free myself from that position there is but one alternative for me to pursue, and I here and now give notice of withdrawal from all executive committee meetings of the Military Affairs Committee in its present consideration of national defense measures, and to maintain that withdrawal until such time as a reasonable part of the record, devoid of any military secrets of those meetings, shall be available to the people.

In the meantime, I shall leave with the chairman of that committee my proxy and authorization to vote me in favor of making that record public. I do not wish to appear alarmist in any degree. I seek only to protect myself from a position that is intolerable and completely out of step with what ought to be practice under a democratic representative form of government.

Mr. President, while I am on my feet, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to an address delivered only a little more than 2 years ago by our Chief Executive at Chautauqua, N. Y., a speech which won more applause, I believe, than any campaign speech ever delivered by an American statesman. The President, in that address said, among other things:

I wish I could keep war from all nations; but that is beyond my power. I can at least make certain that no act of the United States helps to produce or to promote war.

He said again:

It is clear that our present policy and the measures-

Meaning the neutrality measures-passed by the Congress would in the event of a war on some other continent, reduce war profits which would otherwise accrue to American citizens. Industrial and agricultural production for a war market may give immense fortunes to a few men, for the Nation as a whole it produces disaster.

Mr. President, in the light of the contention that is being so freely offered during recent days that there is a fine foreign market available to us in the airplane industry, I desire to repeat this language of 2 years ago spoken by the Presi-

Industrial and agricultural production for a war market may give immense fortunes to a few men; for the Nation as a whole it produces disaster.

It was the prospect of war profits that caused the extension of monopoly and unjustified expansion of industry and a price level so high that the normal relationship between debtor and creditor was destroyed.

Nevertheless, if war should break out again in another continent, let us not blink the fact that we would find in this country thousands of Americans who, seeking immediate riches—fool's gold—would attempt to break down or evade our neutrality.

They would tell you—and, unfortunately, their views would get wide publicity—that if they could produce and ship this and that and the other article to belligerent nations, the unemployed of America would all find work. They would tell you that if they could extend credit to warring nations, that credit would be used in the United States to build homes and factories and pay our debts. They would tell you that America once more would capture the trade of the world.

It would be hard to resist that clamor; it would be hard for many Americans, I fear, to look beyond—to realize the inevitable penalties, the inevitable day of reckoning that comes from a false prosperity. To resist the clamor of that greed, if war should come, would require the unswerving support of all Americans who love

If we face the choice of profits or peace, the Nation will answer—must answer—"We choose peace." It is the duty of all of us to encourage such a body of public opinion in this country that the answer will be clear and for all practical purposes unanimous.

Mr. President, I think there has been no time when there was greater need for adhering to that kind of language than

I ask unanimous consent that the President's address delivered at Chicago on August 14, 1936, may be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The speech referred to is as follows:

[From Washington Post of August 15, 1936]

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT DECRIES WARFARE IN CHAUTAUQUA SPEECH—GOOD-NEIGHBOR POLICY IS CITED AS EXAMPLE TO ALL LANDS—EFFECTIVE NEUTRALITY HELD TO DEPEND ON WISDOM OF EXECUTIVES

EFFECTIVE NEUTRALITY HELD TO DEPEND ON WISDOM OF EXECUTIVES CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., August 14.—Following is the text of President Roosevelt's speech:

"As many of you who are here tonight know, I formed the excellent habit of coming to Chautauqua more than 20 years ago. After my inauguration in 1933, I promised Mr. Bestor that during the next 4 years I would come to Chautauqua again; it is in fulfillment of this that I am with you tonight.

"A few days ago I was asked what the subject of this talk would be, and I replied that for two good reasons I wanted to discuss the subject of peace; first, because it is eminently appropriate in Chautauqua and, secondly, because in the hurly-burly of domestic politics it is important that our people should not overlook problems and issues which, though they lie beyond our borders, may, and probably will, have a vital influence on the United States of the future. the future.

"Many who have visited me in Washington in the past few months have been surprised when I have told them that person-ally and because of my own daily contacts with all manner of difficult situations I am more concerned and less cheerful about international world conditions than about our immediate domestic prospects

"I say this to you not as a confirmed pessimist, but as one who still hopes that envy, hatred, and malice among nations have reached their peak and will be succeeded by a new tide of peace and good will. I say this as one who has participated in many of the decisions of peace and war before, during and after the World War—one who has traveled much and one who has spent a goodly portion of every 24 hours in the study of foreign relations.

"Long before I returned to Washington as President of the United States I had made up my mind that pending what might be called States I had made up my mind that pending what might be called a more opportune moment on other continents the United States could best serve the cause of a peaceful humanity by setting an example. That was why on the 4th of March 1933 I made the following declaration:

"'In the field of world policy I would dedicate this Nation to the policy of the good neighbor—the neighbor who resolutely respects himself and because he does so respects the rights of others; the neighbor who respects his obligations and respects the sanctity of his agreements in and with a world of neighbors.'

"NEIGHBORS IN PRACTICE

"This declaration represents my purpose; but it represents more than a purpose, for it stands for a practice. To a measurable degree, it has succeeded; the whole world now knows that the United States cherishes no predatory ambitions. We are strong; but less powerful nations know that they need not fear our strength. We seek no conquest; we stand for peace.

"In the whole of the Western Hemisphere our good-neighbor of the whole of the western remisphere our good-neighbor policy has produced results that are especially heartening.

"The noblest monument to peace and to neighborly economic and social friendship in all the world is not a monument in bronze or stone but the boundary which unites the United States and Canada—3,000 miles of friendship with no barbed wire, no gun or soldier, and no passport on the whole frontier.

"Mutual trust mode that frontier."

"Mutual trust made that frontier. To extend the same sort of mutual trust throughout the Americas is our aim.
"The American republics to the south of us have been ready always to cooperate with the United States on a basis of equality and mutual respect, but before we inaugurated the good-neighbor policy there was among them resentment and fear, because certain administrations in Washington had slighted their national pride and their sovereign rights.

"In pursuance of the good-neighbor policy, and because in my younger days I had learned many lessons in the hard school of experience, I stated that the United States was opposed definitely to armed intervention.

"We have negotiated a pan-American convention embodying the "We have negotiated a pan-American convention embodying the principle of nonintervention. We have abandoned the Platt amendment, which gave us the right to intervene in the internal affairs of the Republic of Cuba. We have withdrawn American marines from Haiti. We have signed a new treaty which places our relations with Panama on a mutually satisfactory basis. We have undertaken a series of trade agreements with other American countries to our mutual commercial profit. At the request of two neighboring republics I hope to give assistance in the final settlement of the last serious boundary dispute between any of the American nations. American nations.

"CITES PEACE IN AMERICAS

"Throughout the Americas the spirit of the good neighbor is a practical and living fact. The 21 American republics are not only living together in friendship and in peace; they are united in the determination so to remain.

"To give substance to this determination a conference will meet To give substance to this determination a conference will meet on December 1, 1936, at the capital of our great southern neighbor, Argentina, and it is, I know, the hope of all chiefs of state of the Americas that this will result in measures which will banish wars forever from this vast portion of the earth.

"Peace, like charity, begins at home; that is why we have begun at home. But peace in the western world is not all that we seek.

"It is our hope that knowledge of the practical application of the good-neighbor policy in this hemisphere will be borne home to our neighbors across the seas.

"For ourselves we are on good terms with them—terms in most

"For ourselves we are on good terms with them—terms in most cases of straightforward friendship, of peaceful understanding.

"But of necessity we are deeply concerned about tendencies of recent years among many of the nations of other continents. It is a bitter experience to us when the spirit of agreements to which we are a party is not lived up to. It is an even more bitter experience for the whole company of nations to witness not only the spirit but the letter of international agreements violated with impunity and without regard to the simple principles of honor. Permanent friendships between nations as between men can be sustained only by scrupulous respect for the pledged word.

"In spite of all this we have sought steadfastly to assist international movements to prevent war. We cooperated to the bitter end—and it was a bitter end—in the work of the general disarmament conference. When it falled we sought a separate treaty to deal with the manufacture of arms and the international traffic in arms. That proposal also came to nothing. We participated—again to the bitter end—in a conference to continue naval limitations, and when it became evident that no general treaty could be signed because of the objections of other nations we concluded with Great Britain and France a conditional treaty of qualitative limitations which, much to my regret, already shows signs of ineffectiveness.

"We show political commitments which might enfangle us in ineffectiveness

'We shun political commitments which might entangle us in "We shun political commitments which might entangle us in foreign wars; we avoid connection with the political activities of the League of Nations; but I am glad to say that we have cooperated wholeheartedly in the social and humanitarian work at Geneva. Thus we are a part of the world effort to control traffic in narcotics, to improve international health, to help child welfare, to eliminate double taxation, and to better working conditions and laboring hours throughout the world.

"WAR ISOLATIONISTS ONLY

"We are not isolationists except insofar as we seek to isolate ourselves completely from war. Yet we must remember that so long as war exists on earth there will be some danger that even the nation which most ardently desires peace may be drawn into war.

"I have seen war. I have seen war on land and sea. I have seen blood running from the wounded. I have seen men coughing out their gassed lungs. I have seen the dead in the mud. I have seen cities destroyed. I have seen 200 limping, exhausted men come out of line—the survivors of a regiment of 1,000 that went forward 48 hours before. I have seen children starving. I have seen the agony of mothers and wives. I hate war.

"I have passed unnumbered hours, I shall pass unnumbered hours, thinking and planning how war may be kept from this

"I wish I could keep war from all nations; but that is beyond my power. I can at least make certain that no act of the United States helps to produce or to promote war. I can at least make clear that the conscience of America revolts against war and that any nation which provokes war forfeits the sympathy of the people of the United States.

"Many causes produce war. There are ancient hatreds, turbulent frontiers, the 'legacy of old forgotten, far-off things, and battles long ago." There are new-born fanaticisms, convictions on the part of certain peoples that they have become the unique depositories of ultimate truth and right.

"A dark old world was devastated by wars between conflicting religions. A dark modern world faces wars between conflicting economic and political fanaticisms in which are intertwined race hatreds. To bring it home, it is as if within the territorial limits of the United States, 48 nations with 48 forms of government, 48 customs barriers, 48 languages were spending their time and their substance in a frenzy of effort to make themselves strong enough to conquer their neighbors or strong enough to defend themselves against their neighbors.

"OUTLETS BEING FOUND

"In one field, that of economic barriers, the American policy may be, I hope, of some assistance in discouraging the economic source of war and therefore a contribution toward the peace of the world. The trade agreements which we are making are not only finding outlets for the products of American fields and American factories but are also pointing the way to the elimination of embargoes, quotas, and other devices which place such pressure on nations not possessing great natural resources that to them the price of peace seems less terrible than the price of war. "We do not maintain that a more liberal international trade will stop war, but we fear that without a more liberal international trade war is a natural sequence.

"The Congress of the United States has given me certain authority to provide safeguards of American neutrality in case of war. "The President of the United States, who, under our Constitution, is vested with primary authority to conduct our international relations, thus has been given new weapons with which to maintain our neutrality.

"Nevertheless—and I speak from a long experience—the effective maintenance of American neutrality depends today, as in the past, on the wisdom and determination of whoever at the moment occupy the offices of President and Secretary of State.

occupy the offices of President and Secretary of State.

"It is clear that our present policy and the measures passed by the Congress would in the event of a war on some other continent, reduce war profits which would otherwise accrue to American citizens. Industrial and agricultural production for a war market may give immense fortunes to a few men, for the Nation as a whole it produces disaster. It was the prospect of war profits that made our farmers in the West plow up prairie land that should never have been plowed, but should have been left for grazing cattle. Today we are reaping the harvest of those war profits in the dust storms which have devastated those war-plowed areas.

"It was the prospect of war profits that caused the extension of monopoly and unjustified expansion of industry and a price level so high that the normal relationship between debtor and

"Nevertheless, if war should break out again in another continent, let us not blink the fact that we would find in this country thousands of Americans who, seeking immediate riches—fool's gold—would attempt to break down or evade our neutrality.

"They would tell you—and, unfortunately, their views would get wide publicity—that if they could produce and ship this and that and the other article to belligerent nations, the unemployed of America would all find work. They would tell you that if they could extend credit to warring nations that credit would be used in the United States to build homes and factories and pay our debts. They would tell you that America once more would capture the trade of the world.

"DUTY TO STEM PROFITING

'It would be hard to resist that clamor; it would be hard for many Americans, I fear, to look beyond—to realize the inevitable penalties, the inevitable day of reckoning that comes from a false prosperity. To resist the clamor of that greed, if war should come, would require the unswerving support of all Americans who love would require the diswerving support of all Americans who love peace.

"If we face the choice of profits or peace, the Nation will answer—must answer—"We choose peace!" It is the duty of all of us to encourage such a body of public opinion in this country that the answer will be clear and, for all practical purposes, unanimous.

"With that wise and experienced man who is our Secretary of State, whose statesmanship has met with such wide approval, I have thought and worked hard and long on the problem of keeping the United States at peace. But all the wisdom of America is not to be found in the White House or in the Department of State. We be found in the White House or in the Department of State. We need the meditation, the prayer, and the positive support of the people of America who go along with us in seeking peace.

"No matter how well we are supported by neutrality legislation, we must remember that no laws can be provided to cover every contingency, for it is impossible to imagine how every future event may shape itself. In spite of every possible forethought, international relations involve of necessity a vast uncharted area. In that area safe sailing will depend on the knowledge and the experience and the wisdom of those who direct our foreign policy. Peace will depend on their day-to-day decisions.

"ERRORS OF PAST APPARENT

"ERRORS OF PAST APPARENT

"At this late date, with the wisdom which is so easy after the event and so difficult before the event, we find it possible to trace the tragic series of small decisions which led Europe into the Great War in 1914 and eventually engulfed us and many other nations.

"We can keep out of war if those who watch and decide have a sufficient detailed understanding of international affairs to make certain that the small decisions of each day do not lead toward war, and if, at the same time, they possess the courage to say 'no' to those who selfishly or unwisely would let us go

"Of all the nations of the world today we are in many ways most singularly blessed. Our closest neighbors are good neigh-bors. If there are remoter nations that wish us not good but ill, they know that we are strong; they know that we can and will defend ourselves and defend our neighborhood.

"We seek to dominate no other nation. We ask no territorial expansion. We oppose imperialism. We desire reduction in world armaments.

"We believe in democracy; we believe in freedom; we believe in peace. We offer to every nation of the world the handclasp of the good neighbor. Let those who wish our friendship look us in the eye and take our hand."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for an interruption?

Mr. NYE. I shall be happy to yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Having read the address delivered at Chicago by the President of the United States as well as the one from which the Senator has just read, may I ask the able Senator if he feels that there has been any change in view on the part of the President? Is the Senator able to see anywhere any course, policy, or views different from those held by the President at the time the President delivered his addresses.

Mr. NYE. Since I am a member of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, in which the Senator from Illinois also has membership, I hope very much that he will excuse me from answering that question at this time at least.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I did not think it would embarrass the Senator to have that question asked him by a fellow member of the Military Affairs Committee. I merely thought that he was expressing a view which now takes the form of some doubt. I will, of course, at a later time express any viewpoint I have upon the subject, and will not further interrogate the able Senator from North Dakota at this time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I was unable to hear the beginning of the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye] by reason of the fact that I was temporarily called from the Chamber to confer with a caller. Upon my return to the Chamber from a temporary absence I am informed that the Senator from North Dakota stated that it was his intention to participate no further in executive hearings of various committees in the Senate, and particularly the Military Affairs Committee. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota if that statement is correct, I not having had the opportunity of hearing his exact statement.

Mr. NYE. I not only announced an intention to withdraw from further executive committee meetings dealing with the national-defense issue, but announced that I was withdrawing until such time as the committee should see fit to make available to the public that part of its executive record which is devoid of any compromise of any military secret.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to say that on that point I agree most heartily with the protest of the Senator from North Dakota against holding under the seal of secrecy, in executive sessions of committees of either the Senate or the House of Representatives matters not involving military secrets of the United States.

Mr. President, it has been my observation and experience that executive sessions of any committee do not remain executive. Always and inevitably leaks from such sessions occur, not only leaks of such things as took place, but leaks of things that did not take place; not only of things that were said, but of things that were never said. In other words, instead of being permitted to hear what was said, to see the actors in the picture, and to draw their own conclusions, the American people, the sovereign masters of the Congress and of every branch of the Government in this country, are allowed to have leak out to them in garbled form what may have taken place.

A few days ago the Committees on Military Affairs of the Senate and the House were called into an extraordinary meeting to hear a discussion by two distinguished American Ambassadors, and to be instructed on the international situation.

The thought occurred to me, as it did to other members of the committee, that if the international situation was so acute and the crisis so grave as the extraordinary session would have seemed to indicate, it was a remarkable thing that the two Ambassadors at the same time were putting in a month's holiday at some point far from the scene of their official labors, lolling on the sands in Florida. Nevertheless. the joint session was held; and the distinguished chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, the Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppard], and the distinguished chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, Mr. May, of Kentucky, impressed upon us the seal of secrecy.

Before I had time to return to my office on the Senate side of the Capitol there had been half a dozen calls from newspapermen, and in the next 15 minutes I received half a dozen more. I told them that I was under the seal of secrecy. They said that they already knew that so-and-so had been said, and they advised various Senators, including myself, that the members of the House committee were talking. I do not doubt that similar representations were made to House members as to the actions and expressions of Senators. So far as I was concerned, I refused to discuss the matter, or to affirm or deny anything that was said.

The result of the whole incident, Mr. President, was that not only did much that the two Ambassadors had said leak out to the newspapers, but a considerable modicum of things that the two Ambassadors had not said leaked out to the newspapers. Unfortunately, it was the things the two Ambassadors did not say as to the imminence of war that won the newspaper headlines; and because the members of the committees were not willing to discuss things that happened in an executive session, or had their hands tied, the newspapers, the magazines, and the intelligence of this country and of the world have taken a garbled account of what happened in the meeting as having the semblance of truth.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, if I had been at liberty to discuss what went on in that meeting, I should have said to the newspapers what I now say in my place in the Senate on my responsibility as a Senator-that I think the visit from those two Ambassadors was an outrageous attempt to stampede the Military Affairs Committees of the Senate and of the House with respect to an international situation with testimony which simply reflected the views of those two Ambassadors.

In the past week or 10 days we have been conducting very important hearings in the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, in executive session. Nobody has sought to develop any military secrets in those hearings, and I am satisfied that I speak for the whole Committee on Military Affairs when I say that nobody ever will try to develop any military secrets in one of those hearings. Some very important matters have been brought up, partly by accident, which go to the whole foreign policy of the United States. I say that no suggestion has been made for developing any military secret. I will go further and say that so far as the mechanical features of airplane construction are concerned, I do not think any member of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate or of the House is capable of developing a military secret as to the construction of airplanes, or of understanding it if he did develop it.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. Does the Senator make any distinction between a hearing held in an executive session of a committee, such as the Committee on Appropriations, which, when the bill is brought before the Senate, is then made public. and a hearing held over in the large caucus room, where all the press is invited, and where much time is taken up with press photographs and publicity?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I agree entirely with the Senator from Arizona. I should like to say in that connection that I very much regret and deplore the growing tendency, apparently, to turn congressional hearings into hippodrome performances and vaudeville shows in the way the Senator has suggested. I agree entirely with him.

So far as proceeding in executive session is concerned, I have absolutely no objection to that course. The only subject of my remarks is that I say that when the Congress of the United States is called upon to appropriate vast sums of money-incidentally involving also the adoption of what may be a settled foreign policy or a foreign policy of far-reaching consequences—the members of the Military Affairs Committee, or the Foreign Affairs Committee, or of the Appropriations Committee, or of the Naval Affairs Committee, or any other committee of this body, have no more right to be informed of the essential facts than has every other Member of the Senate of the United States who also votes upon such proposals under his responsibility as a Senator. Also the Senate as a whole has no more right to be informed of the essential facts going to make up our national policy than have the whole people of the United States.

Mr. President, I had not intended to address the Senate on the subject at this time until I was informed of the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye]. I merely desire to say that I hope the Senator from North Dakota will not withdraw from the proceedings of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs until the next meeting, which I understand is to be on Friday. At that time it is my intention to offer a motion in that committee to make public, so far as it has been developed, the record with regard to the whole question of the sale of airplanes to foreign powers. If that motion is defeated in the committee, it is my intention to bring the subject before the Senate in any parliamentary way I may be able to devise.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. NYE. For the information of the Senator I should like to repeat what I have already said; namely, that in withdrawing from executive meetings of the committee I have authorized the chairman of the committee to exercise my vote when the particular issue which the Senator suggests

At this point, Mr. President, I desire to suggest the hope that no conclusion will be drawn from anything I have said this afternoon which casts any reflection whatsoever upon the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I join wholeheartedly in the last remark of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. President, what I am speaking about is the habit—the persistent habit—of certain committees of the Senate and of the body at the other end of the Capitol withholding matters in secret session that would be better made matters of public record.

So far as what the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] has said is concerned, I am entirely in sympathy with that. That is a matter of allowing a hearing designed to obtain information for the Senate or the House, as the case may be, to be made into a hippodrome performance, with batteries of flashlights flashing in the eyes of witnesses and with a great corps of newspapermen taking up most of the space in the committee room.

What I am talking about, Mr. President, is the essential fact that for the American people the record itself be made public in due time, and that there shall be no secrets. There is a difference between turning the hearing of a Senate committee into a hippodrome performance and holding it in star chamber with every member of the committee, although he be a representative of a sovereign State, sworn on his oath to use his best judgment to uphold and defend the Constitution of the Government of the United States, going out of the committee hearing with his hands tied, so that he is not free even to get up on the floor and disclose what happened in the committee hearing. It is against that last practice that I am protesting.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF REPORT OF HOUSE COMMITTEE TO INVESTI-GATE UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the morning business is closed.

The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution coming over from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 5) was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed 25,000 additional copies of House Report No. 2, current Congress, entitled "Investigation of Un-American Activities and Propaganda," of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room and 22,000 copies shall be for the use of the House document room.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate concur in the House resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FIRST CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 4) coming over from the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in commemoration of the one hundred fiftieth anniversary of the First Congress of the United States under the Constitution, begun and held at the city of New York on Wednesday, the 4th of March 1789, the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 11 o'clock a. m., on Saturday, March 4, 1939.

That a joint committee consisting of five Members of the House of Representatives and five Members of the Senate shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate, respectively, which is empowered to make suitable arrangements for fitting and proper exercises for the joint session of Congress herein authorized.

session of Congress herein authorized.

That invitations to attend the exercises be extended to the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Diplomatic Corps (through the Secretary of State), the General of the Armies, the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard, and such other persons as the joint committee on arrangements shall deem proper.

That the President of the United States is hereby invited to address the American people at the joint session of the Congress in commemoration of the one hundred fiftleth anniversary of the First Congress of the United States under the Constitution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the House concurrent resolution be considered at this time. I will say that the concurrent resolution provides for the appointment of a joint committee of the House and Senate to consist of five members from each body to arrange for the commemoration on the 4th of next March of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of the American Congress. I think it would be a very fitting thing for the two Houses to meet in joint session at that time and participate in appropriate ceremonies to celebrate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of the American Congress. I ask that the resolution be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

AMERICA'S FOREIGN POLICY—SECRECY OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word or so in regard to the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NyE] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

I am not a member of the Military Affairs Committee, and I do not know what has transpired in the committee with respect to any of its hearings. We all have recognized for a long time that it is entirely within the province of any committee holding hearings upon an important matter to decide for itself whether the hearings shall be open or secret. I am assuming that the Military Affairs Committee in determining in the particular instance and up to now to hold closed hearings have been actuated by the feeling that in such hearings might be developed expressions of opinions or facts which, at least for the time being, ought not to be made public.

I am a great believer and have always been a great believer in publicity. I voted here time after time to remove from the executive sessions of the Senate the veil of secrecy and to hold such sessions in public, in order that any reason that might be advanced for the rejection of any appointee of the President might be discussed openly, always, of course, with the reservation in which, I think, the Senate itself concurred, that if on any occasion there was any reason why the discussion of a man's character or anything pertaining to his fitness was of such a peculiarly personal nature that it ought to be conducted behind closed doors the Senate would have the right so to order. I do not think that is an unreasonable exception. It so happens, I think, that since we provided for open executive sessions there has arisen no occasion for going into closed executive session on the nomination of any appointee. I am thoroughly committed, as a general proposition, to publicity in all matters of governmental activity.

We all realize that no one can ever in advance prophesy just what a witness will say in a committee or the reaction that a remark made by men high in authority may have in the public press and therefore upon the public. I have attended open hearings, and I dare say most of the Members of the Senate have, where unexpectedly and without premeditation, something has occurred that gave tone or character to the testimony that diverted it from its original purpose and offered an opportunity for headlines that were entirely misleading insofar as the facts were concerned.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to say to the Senator that I understand entirely and I agree exactly with his position with regard to the matter of holding open hearings, and the rule has been adhered to, so far as I know, by every committee of which I have ever been a member in this body or have ever known anything about. That is to say, that where, in the course of a hearing, an important governmental matter was discussed, that at the suggestion of the witness or the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, as has happened in the Military Affairs Committee several times during its hearings, there was developed anything that was even remotely considered to disclose a governmental secret of any sort, it was not only held executive but left off the record. That, however, is not the proposition to which I was addressing myself in my remarks a few moments ago. I was addressing myself to the point that, after a hearing has been conducted in such fashion as not to involve the disclosure of the statement of a witness of anything of the sort, that the Senator has just indicated, the members of the committee themselves ought not to go out with their hands tied concerning a hearing held in a secret session as to the whole record about which, perhaps, the Senate or the country ought to know.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that brings up the question that always concerns us here of how these leaks occur. I do not know.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield in a moment.

I agree with the Senator's viewpoint that when a committee is holding a secret session no member of the committee ought to go out and divulge what has transpired, and I am sure, of course, that no Senator so believing would in the remotest degree be guilty of divulging it, but it is an exasperating fact that in some way either garbled or truthful repetitions of what happens in committee get into the press. It may be a strange statement to make, but so far as any secrets are concerned, either military or diplomatic, I am not so much disturbed about garbled statements that go into the press as I am about truthful statements that might go into the press concerning actual secrets, either military or diplomatic, because the importance of preserving secrecy with respect to military secrets or diplomatic secrets is not to keep them from the American people but to keep them from the people of other nations who may profit by the knowledge they thus obtain. If there were some way to insulate the American Nation so that information to which the American people might be entitled and which they will be glad to have could be given to them alone and not be percolated into the chancelleries and military headquarters of other nations, it might be a different proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield in a moment, but the theory upon which we preserve secrets is that information shall not be divulged to other nations.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I understand what the theory is; but the fact is that apparently all the information about our own national affairs percolates into the chancelleries and various other agencies of Europe and every other country in the world, and the only people who are to be insulated and protected from the facts are the American people.

Mr. BARKLEY. The same representatives of publicity agents who percolate it into other nations can percolate it into the American people because they have access to it in the first instance, if they get it at all. The point is that I do not think a committee of the Senate dealing with military matters is to be criticized because it decides to hold secret sessions, and the attitude of the Senator from North Dakota withdrawing from participation in such sessions is, by implication, if not a criticism, at least an expression of his disapproval of that method of procedure.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President-

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I should like to say to him that I am not going to withdraw; I am going to "stick around."

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator is right; I think it is his duty. I was very glad to be partly instrumental in placing the Senator on that committee—

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thank the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Because of his great military knowledge and his service to his country and his patriotic outlook upon matters of that kind. I think the Senator would be probably censurable if deliberately, because the sessions were secret, he withheld his presence and his assistance.

I do not know what the committee ultimately will do with respect to holding further secret sessions or divulging the testimony which it has developed. I am sure it will do whatever it thinks is its duty in that regard.

Now, just one thing about the two Ambassadors to whom the Senator referred.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me before he touches upon that subject?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. NYE. I should like to have the Record made very clear with respect to my own attitude regarding so-called executive meetings of the committees.

I have no desire to throw the meetings open to the public, or even to the press. What I protest against is fastening an obligation of secrecy upon what transpires during the meetings, even though what transpires there is matter which quite properly might have been left wide open to the press and to the public. For the past 2 weeks we have had examples of how thoroughly distorted truths may become as the result of the enlargement upon them that comes out of these secret sessions.

I repeat, I have no desire to do away with so-called executive sessions of committees, especially the Military Affairs Committee. The same thing certainly would be true especially of the Foreign Relations Committee. I do protest, however, against the element of secrecy which is fixed upon many committee meetings which sometimes prevents the public from getting a reaction and a truth that obviously ought to be theirs.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I realize that it is always difficult for a committee to draw the line between what ought to be kept secret and what ought not to be kept secret; and, of course, it is difficult for an individual member to draw the line properly. What I might regard as being a matter suitable for the public to know might be one thing. What the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppard] might regard as something that could be divulged without injuring our country in any way might be another thing. But so long as secret sessions are held, and so long as we have a right to assume that the committee, acting in its own jurisdiction, has a right to determine that matter, I do not know how we are ever going to change the rule so that, although it is a secret session collectively, it is an open session individually, and each member present in the secret session has a right to go out and divulge what occurred in the secret session.

With respect to the Senator's suggestions about the two distinguished Ambassadors-our Ambassador to France and our Ambassador to England-I do not understand that those gentlemen came here primarily for the purpose of going before the joint session of the two Military Affairs Committees. I do not know whether they came home on leave, or whether they overstayed their leave, or at whose suggestion they appeared before the joint session of the committees; but having traveled a little bit in the world-not so much as my distinguished and able and handsome friend from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], but having traveled somewhat-I think it would be a good thing if more American representatives to foreign countries should find occasion to come home now and then and keep in contact with the American people, so that they would not lose the American viewpoint, so that they would be in truth and in fact able to represent the people of the United States. I think it would be money well spent if Congress should appropriate enough money to pay the expenses of our representatives to foreign countries in order that they might come home now and then and keep in closer touch not only with our Government but with the American people, so as to be able to convey the American viewpoint.

I do not understand that either Ambassador Bullitt or Ambassador Kennedy of his own initiative and volition went before the joint session of the committees. I am not able to say just how that conjunction of events was brought about: but it was not only their privilege, as I believe, but it was their duty to lay before any committee of the Congress-the Military Committee or the Foreign Affairs Committee-any information which they felt would be of benefit to the American Government and the American Congress in describing what they thought to be the situation in Europe and in other parts of the world which might vitally affect the welfare of our country.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator says he is not advised as to how these two gentlemen happened to come before the joint meeting of the two Military Affairs Committees. I suggest to him that under the very strict rule of confidence imposed at the time of that joint hearing, no member of either committee is able to inform him. If the Senator will come around here privately, I shall try to whisper in his ear. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that, but I do not think it is very vital how the Ambassadors happened to go before the committees.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So far as that is concerned, I do not think anything they said was very vital.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is a matter of opinion. I do not know what they said. Therefore, I am not in position to pass judgment on it. However, it is not a matter of any great importance whether acting upon their own initiative they went before the committees to divulge their views of the conditions in Europe in order that we might take advantage of it and give to it any weight that we might see fit to give, or whether they were invited by the committees, or whether they were instructed by higher authority to go before the committees. The Ambassadors had a right to go voluntarily if they thought it was their duty to do so. They had a right to go as the result of a suggestion from anybody or as a result of an invitation from the committees themselves. The point is not how they happened to go before the committees, but whether, as representatives of the American Government. charged with some responsibility toward that Government in keeping it informed not only from the standpoint of the Executive but from the standpoint of legislation, they stated what they feel is going on in the world. I, myself, do not think they are justly entitled to be criticized for appearing before the committees, no matter who took the initiative in having them appear.

I wish to say also that I think, if the course I have suggested were followed, the Congress would be richer in knowledge, and certainly it would be richer in its outlook upon the problems of the world which affect every man. woman, and child in America. Every morning, before we eat our breakfasts, we read in the headlines what is going on elsewhere in the world. The prices of our products, our commodities, and the security of our lives are bound up in one way or another with what is going on in the world. Whether we like it or not, we cannot completely dissociate ourselves from the events in other nations; and I think no misinterpretation or wrong impression ought to go out here, because of anything that has been said, that we do not welcome any information that can be brought to us from any source that may help us in guiding the destinies of our own country-in trying to chart the course of our ship between Scylla and Charybdis in the eventful days through which we are passing.

Mr. Johnson of California, Mr. Vandenberg, Mr. Lewis, and Mr. REYNOLDS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Johnson of Colorado in the chair). The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rose and addressed the Chair, but I do not feel that this side of the Chamber should monopolize the floor at this time. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] preceded me in addressing the Chair. I now yield my position to him or to the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson], who likewise preceded me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, with much that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] says I heartily agree; but I think the fundamental question is different from what he has indicated. The fundamental question here is, Shall we be eased into war and our people never know it? Shall we be in the position of men and women who are carried to war without their knowledge, or are we entitled to the knowledge if we are being carried into war?

That is the question, and that is the only question involved. As the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] says, if we are carried into this sort of fracas without knowledge upon our part; if, as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NyE] says. we must maintain secrecy against everything that may militate against us in the future; then some means should be devised by which secrecy may be eliminated from the Senate of the United States and its committees.

Do Senators realize what the incident which we are now discussing had its genesis in? Do they realize that if it had not been for a freak of fate, no one here would have known that this particular French commission was in this country for the purpose of obtaining planes to be used in warfare? It happened that down in Los Angeles a man who was a member of the French commission went up in an airplane which was designed for warfare, and he went up in it under a name different from that which was his own. He was injured by the crashing of the plane; and then it was discovered, as he was carried into the hospital, very badly injured, that his name was something else than that which he had given, and which was accepted, and under which he was cleared when he entered the plane. Then it was, and then only, that the American people knew that a foreign commission was in this country for the purpose of acquiring airplanes.

We were endeavoring to acquire certain numbers of airplanes ourselves, but, in our generosity and in our benevolence, we were willing to postpone our needs and our requirements to aid a foreign country, and enable it first to acquire the planes which it needed.

These things were unknown to our people until fate intervened. Why were they unknown? Good God, do you not think, Senators, the American people have the right to know if they are going down the road to war? Do you not think the American people, with their experience of the past 20 years, should be informed if their rulers are going to take them even to the brink of war?

Why should they not be informed? They are our masters, and the only master I recognize. Why should they not be informed if such is to be the course to be pursued by their Government?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Regardless of the merits of the incident with respect to the man's name—and I have no way to inject myself into his bosom and interpret his purpose in keeping his name secret—

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I am not referring to that except to indicate the secrecy.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suppose the Senator will not contend that the sale of planes to the French people or the French Government in the present situation is a violation of any treaty, or of any obligation on the part of our country, or of the Neutrality Act, or of international law as it has been recognized for a period of many years.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Did the Senator understand me to say any such thing?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I did not.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Very well, then, why put a rhetorical question?

Mr. BARKLEY. Because if we are doing nothing in violation of international law or in violation of any obligation of ours, if we are doing what our people have always done under the rules of international law, selling products to other nations which are not at war, how is such a sale automatically to drag us into war, as the Senator seems to fear?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Senator misstates the real point in the argument. It is the question of secrecy, the question of keeping from the American people just what is being done in respect of matters of this sort, and the possibilities of sales of planes and sales of other munitions of warfare, matters which the Senator understands as well as I do, and I do not need to descant upon them. He understands that from a simple beginning may be an ending that is horrible in its nature.

The point of my objection is that we are entitled to know when you are going to take us along this road, and we are entitled to know when we are being taken along this road. For that I do criticize you, and for that alone.

Mr. LEWIS obtained the floor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to say that the Senate Committee on Military Affairs has as yet made no decision to keep the proceedings before it permanently secret. In fact, in every recent meeting members of the committee have informally discussed the question as to when it would be advisable to give publicity to what has taken place. The fact is that up to this time the printed transcript of the proceedings before the committee are not back from the Printing Office.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I wish to endorse to the fullest extent what the chairman of the committee has stated. I should like to say also that in every way the chairman of the committee has been more than fair in seeking the expression of the views of all members of the committee, and more than fair in entertaining various witnesses who have been before the committee.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to say further that on two or three occasions I personally have given notice that I intended at the proper time to move to make the hearings public.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And I state now that I intend at the next regular meeting of the committee, which I understand will be on Friday, to make such a motion.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to add that the situation is as the Senator from Missouri has stated it. The members of the committee have reached no definite decision as to whether the proceedings shall be published. Neither have they decided that the proceedings shall be kept secret permanently. The only question is as to when the committee thinks it is desirable to give them publicity.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course, the Senator will admit that in the meantime the members of the committee have been standing by with their hands tied while various statements have been published in the newspapers of the United States as to what was going on in the committee. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The newspapers have published conflicting statements about what has been going on; and that is one of the disadvantages of secret hearings.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beseech the Senate to indulge me for a few moments that I may refer to some allusions by the Senators who have addressed the body. These touch some phases of the present international situation. These statements I fear may receive a misunderstanding—possibly a misinterpretation, by the public—by our countrymen.

The references to the two gentlemen who are our Ambassadors do not concern me as to their personal life. I know both Ambassadors. I lately have been in Europe, as is known, engaged in an incidental Government mission not of great importance. In this I was thrown constantly and daily, during my short stay in England, with our Ambassador, Mr. Kennedy, who is now in this country. I am pleased to tell my colleagues that however much I differ from some of the views expressed by the able Ambassador as I read them his standing in England is of such high character that, judging by the temper of expressions in his behalf should he conclude to transform himself to a citizen of England, he would be made a member of the House of Lords.

As to Mr. Bullitt, it has been noted that from time to time he has been called for throughout France for addresses upon matters which touch French history and the past record of the French people. These things merely indicate the personal regard in which the French have come to hold him and those into whose hands we have committed our country and its fortunes in England and France.

Mr. President, what I fear is that some of these expressions from our Senators might indicate that this honorable body, which confirmed these two appointees, has lost some respect or confidence in their services. Nothing of the kind is true. Nothing of the kind, I am sure, is intended by the Members of this body whose observations have in the last few moments interested us.

I turn for a second to the Committee on Military Affairs. I pay tribute to the able chairman, duplicating and adding strength to the expressions of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye].

Mr. President, the theory of preserving for a while in the Military Committee a form of executive secrecy is not because of what the committee does, if I may be permitted to so remark to my able friend the distinguished Senator form California [Mr. Johnson], it is because of expressions and conduct on the part of witnesses who may come before the committee, and to whom questions—interrogations of a very serious character, may be addressed by members of the committee—who, feeling that they have information of a very salutary nature, and possibly of a very weighty character, convey to the witnesses an impression of what appears to be the effect of that information. That conclusion goes out to the country as an expression of the committee, and oftentimes is imputed to those in authority—the War Department or the President.

To avoid that misconstruction is the purpose of the honorable chairman, and of the rule of limited secrecy of the committee. It was decided—and I am sure the chairman will concur with me in the statement—that when we reached a concurrence, a conclusion, as to any action, the whole action should be made wholly public, either in the form of a report to this body, or to the public, as the case might require.

Mr. President, I wish now to take the liberty of asking my fellow Senators to hear me upon another feature. It is that our country just now is being driven, by observations of editorials and speeches, to the conclusion that there is some secret and underlying arrangement between this, our United States, and foreign countries. Particularly true is this as to those in Europe—particularly, sir, France and England—more specifically, sir, in behalf of those who represent the military authority of these countries.

This conclusion or this suspicion on the part of our public is imputed at once to some secret course of the President, upon the theory that of course he must know about it, and must have given his approval to it and, as the Senator from California rightfully asserts that if such is the fact, this fact is being hidden from the public and being withheld from the Senate. If such state of affairs exists, such should be forthcoming promptly, and should be revealed in a disclosure admitting of no qualification.

There is another feature more provoking. I refer to the statements being made by eminent leaders abroad which involve our United States. These masters of authority in their public declarations find it agreeable to ever express in some of their observations what they claim is the position of the United States, or what they desire that the United States entertain in its feelings and policy. I invite Senators now to hear specific instances, and in my judgment the meaning of them.

When the honorable Premier of England, Mr. Chamberlain, occupying his high position of authority, made the statement in his latest assertion that there was the aspect that in the prospect of what he called "appeasement for peace" the United States would concur in expressions he used and the policy he advocated, he left the suggestion to our people and to men of the temper of our thought and those of the mind and the patriotism of the eminent Senator from California that there must have been something somewhere that authorized Mr. Chamberlain to assume his viewpoint, and something authorized from official authority in the United States of America as license for the English Premier to involve us in his calculations.

I desire to have it understood that it is my belief, and here I assert, that there has never been an expression from those in authority in the United States of America to justify any foreign premier to say what the position of the United States would be in a matter in which the foreign government is involved, particularly where it is a military contention and a military conflict. This expression only could come from our people through Congress. I here charge that the artful policy on the part of these eminent directors is to make their people feel that they have the great power of the United States in support of their measures and their undertakings; the object of these assumptions is to impart to their people the belief that if they do not already have it, they are on the eve of obtaining what they assert, and this from something that has transpired between these nations to initiate and authorize an assumption as presented on their part. Though they may know there is not the aspect of fact of that they present; yet they achieve the purpose of the diplomat "to make a virtue of a pretense."

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Michigan rises. I yield to him.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would the Senator go so far as to say that he doubts even whether there is any agreement in respect to the stabilization fund which would involve our mutual responsibility for the French franc and the British pound—a responsibility in turn which might be of the utmost primary importance in case of war?

Mr. LEWIS. I would say this in answer to my able friend that I cannot believe that there has been any understanding on the part of our Government and the government of France, or the people of France, or the representatives of France, by any officers of our Government, that there shall be extracted from the fund known as the stabilization fund, money, either in the form of a loan to the French government or as payment for these planes. I do know that there are those who feel that such is possible, and such action has been charged. I answer that if such had ever existed it would come in the form, first, of a request from our Cabinet or President to this honorable body for authority, before anything of such nature would be undertaken.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. My interrogation had nothing to do with the use of the funds for the purchase of these planes. I have no information of that character. I am asking the fundamental question whether or not a three-way agreement between the Treasury of the United States and the Treasury of France and the Treasury of Great Britain to stabilize currency through the use of our stabilization fund would not be of major military moment in the contemplation of a foreign war, and whether or not if such agreements do exist—and I assume that they must exist from what we know—if they exist why do they not involve us in advance in a matter concerning which we have absolutely no information whatever?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, some time past there was an understanding between the Government of the United States and the Government of France and the Government of Great Britain to come to some agreement with the view of holding on equality the money of the three countries for the purpose of international trade. That is now elapsed and passed for more than a year. My able friend knows about it, and knows the consequence of it as a purely commercial undertaking.

I answer then his conclusion. If there had been a new arrangement different from that which was addressed to a commercial purpose, an arrangement for the purpose of war, this honorable body, or the House, would be informed of it, and knowing how serious it would be, as the Senator has well put it, I assure the Senator from Michigan such could not have existed without information coming to this body. Neither the President nor the Secretary of the Treasury would have ventured upon such a development, with its serious implications without information to and instructions from the Congress.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the stabilization fund operates not only under a seal of secrecy, but under an absolute refusal ever to permit anyone in Congress or anywhere else to ask any questions whatsoever regarding what has been done with any of the $2,000,000,000. I call the Senator's attention further to the fact that when that authorization recently was extended, I offered a very modest resolution calling for a complete report after the fact, when the fund is done, and still the Senate voted by a substantial majority to refuse even to require a final report upon the $2,000,000,000. So that the stabilization fund exists today not only under a mantle of complete secrecy, but under an absolute prohibition against any cross-examination by anyone in respect to it.

Therefore, when the Senator from Illinois says that if any such agreement were made we would know about it, I respectfully submit to him that we would not and could not under the existing situation.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, we have known that in England there has existed a large fund that maintains the pound in its proper place despite whatever transpires in its commerce, its industry, or in the threat of conflict. We know that the Bank of France sought to have a similar fund for the preservation of the franc—as my friend well calls it, the value and stability of the franc. We know that that prevails. Then it was, I think, for the first time in the history of this Government, so far as my limited experience with it can testify, that we adopted a similar policy, and that fund, which we created was rightfully termed the stabilization fund. This was inaugurated for the single object and purpose of such courses with these other councies in maintaining our own standard, and, having that behind it, we felt we could maintain the American dollar in its proper place in the same manner that the fund for England maintained its pound, and the fund in France sought to maintain its franc. I am aware of no other purpose.

If it be true, as the able Senator says—and he would not say it if it were not true—that there has been some secrecy continued, and a withholding of facts as to his resolution—I would assume that would be true as to the matters which we felt were the confidences of these others with whom we are entering into some kind of understanding to help aid these two commercial countries; this for the purpose of maintaining a level that would serve our industry and commerce as completely as it does proportionately theirs. But I am not conscious that any other purpose has ever been indulged, or that any other purpose is served by the fund, concerning which there is secrecy.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may ask another question?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would the Senator agree with me that if there is a three-way agreement between England, France, and the United States mutually to stabilize currencies, the Congress of the United States ought to know about it?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator: There is a shorter way. If the able Senator has some ideas upon that which he would like to have serve for the necessity of his position, I suggest that the Senator introduce his resolution addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury for the information, and that that be replied to, and thus the information will be obtained.

Then the latter part of the question: Yes; if there was a position taken by the officials, the President or the Secretary of the Treasury, connected with this fund, which applied to the country at large for any other than financial operations for commerce the Congress ought to know about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wanted to make an inquiry of the Senator along the same lines to which he has directed his recent remarks. In the first place we did not establish a stabilization fund in this country until after both England and France, through their proper authorities and banking institutions, had established a stabilization fund of their own, to deal with commercial matters, and not from a military standpoint. This fund of ours certainly was not created in contemplation of any war, and I do not think that the fund used in England or in France was created in contemplation of war, although I suppose their situation over there is such that they always contemplate the possibility of war. The establishment of our fund was purely a commercial arrangement, as I understand.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But if there be a war could anything be more vitally important to all concerned?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not so certain that the existence of a stabilization fund and the manner in which it has been operated is a matter of vital knowledge bearing upon a possible war. It is commercially desirable, and has been recognized all along as commercially desirable, that there be no great fluctuations in international currency. We recognize the fact that if the English pound or the French franc should collapse in value in international exchange it would be to our great disadvantage. It is desirable that there be no fluctuation even for our own selfish interests, in order to maintain the even tenor of trade and not to be caught at a disadvantage with our competitors, even though they are friendly nations in the international sense of that word. We could not afford to be caught in the situation where our merchants and our manufacturers and our international trade would be placed at a distinct disadvantage with respect to England or France or any other country.

But those are the two countries with which we have to some extent cooperated, I presume, in the matter of the stabilization fund. These operations depend more or less on day-to-day action. They are somewhat like the various markets. The conditions which exist today may not exist next week, and did not exist last week, so that it is impossible, I think, for all of us to know from day to day just the use to which this stabilization fund is put, and it will be, I think, in the nature of undertaking to disclose our hand, commercially speaking, if we were required openly and publicly every day to advise the people and Congress how the stabilization fund is operated.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, I have suggested nothing of that sort.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I understand that, but we are talking about secrecy. I understand that the stabilization fund has been used in such a way as to make a profit to the American Treasury of something like $12,000,000. Certainly there has been no loss in its operation. That is not a great amount, as we think in terms of money now, but it certainly has been conservatively and prudently managed. As to any ironbound arrangement between the three countries with respect to the stabilization fund, I doubt whether there is any such thing in existence. Whatever understandings there are, are undoubtedly informal. They depend upon the conditions as they develop from week to week, and month to month, and, myself, I should regret exceedingly to see any very large body of opinion in this country advocate the abolition of the stabilization fund, so as to put us and our commercial interests at the mercy of those who maintain a stabilization fund for their own benefit.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes, of course, I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me say I have not suggested abandoning the stabilization fund, nor have I suggested its continuous day-to-day publicity. I am submitting solely the observation that if there are any obligations which bind us to the maintenance of the stabilization of the franc and the pound, Congress ought to know about them. This is the question I wish to ask the Senator: If there is an agreement under which we are bound to help stabilize the pound and the franc, and either England or France should be drawn into European war, if that agreement between us to sustain the franc or the pound still exists, under those circumstances do we not automatically become the ally of either France or England in net result?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think so. The stabilization fund is operated through an informal agreement. It could not take on the dignity of a treaty. Whatever is done is done through an informal understanding between the Treasury of the United States and the similar agencies in France and England. As I understand, there is nothing binding about it that would carry it over any definite period. We may withdraw our operations whenever we see fit. Even if they were to get into war—

Mr. VANDENBERG. Upon what does the Senator base his statement?

Mr. BARKLEY. In my judgment the operation of the stabilization fund for our commercial advantage would not automatically or by implication make us an ally of any nation which got into war.

Mr. VANDENBERG. How does the Senator know that we may withdraw at any time we wish to do so? Does he know what the agreement is?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have never seen it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Exactly, and neither has any other Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no information as to whether there is any agreement in writing. It is a day-to-day or week-to-week understanding, an informal arrangement by which all stabilization funds are operated. Whether or not they are operated at all depends to a large extent on the matter of international trade and the value of money in international exchange.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would the Senator agree that if there is a firm agreement, we ought to know about it?

Mr. BARKLEY. I should want to look into that matter, and look at the reasons for such an agreement, before making a categorical answer.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I stated a moment ago, in the presence of the press—that the two expressions lately coming from abroad had had great effect upon the American mind. I make bold to say to this body that it is our duty promptly to remove that false effect. I desire to remove it, if I can, by giving what I feel to be the proper construction and the purpose of the assertions from abroad in the speeches I alluded to. I assert that they never had for their object the revelation of anything that was assumed to have passed from the United States to these foreign authorities.

I take first the remark of the Premier of England, Mr. Chamberlain; in this occurs his expression with respect to advantageous cooperation with the United States. This, he said, would aid in an appeasement, or looking for the conclusion in some form of a new agreement for peace. I said in my first utterance before interruption, and I now repeat, that there was no foundation on the part of the eminent Premier for concluding that any expression had ever come from this country or its officials that justified him in telling his people that there was a hope that the United States could be drawn into some understanding with a foreign country to bear its burdens in war, or pay its expenses in conflict.

I go further and say that those expressions on the part of the adroit Premier—if made as reported—were not intended to leave the impression that such an agreement had been concluded, but to leave on the minds of the British people the impression that there were reasons to hope for the cooperation of the United States of America in whatever they should undertake. The object of the speaker was to strengthen the confidence of his own people and to give to them something of a feeling of security in the event that there should be an assault, there was the hope fulfilled such as the distinguished Premier indicated as a possibility from the United States.

I now come to the second basis I assumed. my brethren of the Senate and gentlemen of the press, to recall the late speech made by Mr. Hitler, when Mr. Hitler used, in his speech, the expression which has been quoted in his Monday utterance—the one embodying his appeal for the colonies. He is reported as saying that there was no object to have a military conflict at that time and that there was no action in contemplation in opposition to the United States. Yet the Fuehrer volunteered to reflect on a member of the President's Cabinet. He charged him as one who had joined the expressions of a couple of named English statesmen in what he said was for the purpose of invoking war. Do not let us be deluded into a belief and conviction in the words of these eminent statesmen. They did not intend their words to be taken in that sense among their own people. They must not be so taken by us.

I refer particularly to that passage wherein Mr. Hitler said, or left the impression, that there was no object or purpose of any assault in any form upon the United States. That was for the purpose of allaying the United States from any form of preparation that may be essential to its defense and protection in the event that there should come something toward us in the form of attack. The object is perfectly clear. It is the object of the military cabal in power in Germany. The real object of Germany—I refer to its military leaders—and that of Italy and its leaders, and that of Japan, jointly, is to crush and break up the British Empire. The purpose is to divide the lands from unity wherever they can. The ultimate purpose in their minds at the time is so to conduct a course as to sever the relations between the commonwealth countries and what we speak of as their mother country, England.

The statement to us that there was no intent so far as we were concerned was not intended to be taken by his own people literally, for he follows it with something of an accusation against a member of our Cabinet, indicating that the feeling is one of resentment against the United States.

Again, sir, it was for the more effective purpose. It was as if to say to the Premier, Mr. Chamberlain, "You need not be calling on the United States, or intimating, sir, that you will have aid from them, for we advise them now that they are in no danger of any nature whatever that would call for them to cooperate with you, or justify you in assuming that they have any reason to do so."

Thus, that fruitful speech on the part of the distinguished leader of the German Government is too plain to us to be misunderstood or to be taken by us as one of assault on security. It was the masterful manipulation of a director of aroused emotions—and constructor of unexpected phases—of evolution and revolution of conquerors.

Now, Mr. President, let me conclude. If we proceed in the Military Affairs Committee looking to find ways and means for the defense of this Nation, preparing in anticipation of trouble, must we not do it correctly? Must we not do it efficiently? Must we not do it as powerfully as we can? It is not my purpose to point out, respecting these claims what benefits there may be to France, and how we should contribute in that respect. I must leave the military affairs of my country as first consideration to the judgment of those best qualified to administer them. When they have advised us as to their course, or their intentions, or their final action, then will be the time for us to take such steps as we feel would be appropriate.

Let me impress this thought upon all: This country must not again allow the representatives of foreign powers to delude us into a complacency and confidence that take from us the importance of immediate activity and cooperation in preparation for the defense and preservation of this, our America. Nor shall we forget that we were drawn into other conflicts by being first invested with the confidence that there would be no attack made upon us or our countrymen, and because of that we deferred too long any action that was necessary to prepare, for that which befell us, unhappily for our fate.

Therefore, sirs, as we move along, let us say to the American people, "You need not allow yourselves to be disturbed by expressions of these eminent premiers of foreign countries. They speak to their own people; and while we quote their speeches in this land, it is not through fear, and it is not out of any particular estimate of value. It is merely for information."

Let us say to the representatives of other governments, "We say to you that whenever the American people wish to speak their purposes to you, they will do it through ourselves. When action is desired in joint behalf, we will submit the question to the proper agencies of our Nation."

Mr. President, let us turn about for a moment and call out to our countrymen that though we may differ from our President in many things from time to time on matters of civil policy, but we acknowledge that he is the President of the United States. He has been chosen as such by the voice and will of our people. He is the Commander in Chief of our forces of defense, and by our theory of government is looked to to take the proper steps for the defense and preservation of the Republic. Shall we, Senators, and you who harken to me from any source, leave upon the American public the impression that those who express themselves from abroad are speaking with power and authority as to the United States? Shall we leave the other impression that we have not confidence in the head of our own Government, to look to it for proper information and for the successful defense and security of our citizens? Shall we invest the public of our land with something of a tremor and fear that there are dangers all around us which are not being taken care of by those in charge who are vested with authority? Has not the time come to say to our countrymen, "We confide in the government we have. We trust its patriotism. We wholly, in every wise, invest our hope and all of our future in the faith we have in its honor and its devotion."

Our countrymen reed have no fear. This country is not contemplating entering into war nor joining with any land abroad in any of its wars. Its policy is to defend itself, and to prepare that defense in the event that others should make Further than that, nothing more. We, therefore, wish to have you know that we, the Congress, present to America the confidence we feel in those who command the authorities of this Government. We present to the President of the United States our respect; we tender to him the confidence we have in his patriotism. We tell our countrymen they are secure; and with him and with them our country rests, sir, where it should—an independent, preserved America.

If we have proceeded upon some theory of defense, it is not because we are frightened or behold a present danger; it is because if it is to be done, then, sirs, in the phrase of Shakespeare—

If it were done when 'tis done, Then 'twere well it were done quickly.

And if we are to enter upon the preparation of defense, it must be before the world so complete that before their very eyes they are confronted with our power, our purpose, our patriotism that warns all that the United States ever striving for peace, yet are prepared to defend our Nation and protect our people as against assault from any other people in the world. I thank the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong this discussion, though it has been a very interesting one; but I cannot leave entirely unnoticed the suggestion made a while ago by the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] when he intimated his belief that by the sale of airplanes to France our Government was postponing its own needs until the requirements of France should be fulfilled. I am sure the Senator from California would not wish to leave an erroneous impression in respect to that matter. For that reason I rise to correct the implication or the suggestion.

In the first place, the American Government does not manufacture its own airplanes; it buys them from private industry. It has no authority now by reason of any appropriation made available by Congress to purchase planes that will be sold to the French Government. The President has asked Congress for $500,000,000 to be expended over a period of 2 years for purposes of national defense. That money has not been made available; it is not now available and may not be available for several weeks or it may be months.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to inquire where the Senator from Kentucky got his information? I am not revealing any information, but as a member of the Military Affairs Committee I listened to its hearings, and from what I heard of those hearings I can say this much: That the statements now being made by the Senator from Kentucky are entirely at variance with the records I heard in the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know, of course, what transpired in the Military Affairs Committee, but when the President of the United States came to the Congress and in a solemn message asked Congress to appropriate $500,000,000 for national defense, most of it intended to be used for the purchase of airplanes, I have a right to assume, I think—as I do assume—that he was not making an idle gesture, and was not requesting of Congress appropriations for airplanes that the Government did not need.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator realize that authorization was made last year for a certain airplane program in this country?

Mr. BARKLEY. But there were no appropriations made; as I understand there was merely an authorization.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Appropriations have been made for the purchase of a certain number of those planes. Does the Senator further realize that the plane which crashed out in Los Angeles was a plane designed to be entered—and there is no dispute about that—in the competition for the purchase of airplanes under last year's program and not under this year's program?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think the question of an air force in providing for our national defense depends upon the type of plane that happened to crash out in California. If the President of the United States has asked Congress to appropriate half a billion dollars for national defense, which is not needed or necessary, that fact has not been revealed to the American public or to the American Congress; but I do not believe that the President of the United States would come here and make a request for an appropriation of that sort if it were not necessary. Regardless, however, of anybody's opinion as to the merits of the national-defense program—and there is legitimate room for an honest difference of opinion as to that question-the point I rose to address myself to was the insinuation that while we are waiting, by some arrangement of purchase from private industries in the United States by the French Government of a certain number of airplanes, we are postponing the fulfillment of our own military and naval requirements in the matter of airplane purchases.

The airplane factories of this country have not had sufficient market for their products as yet to enable them to arrive at what is commonly called mass production. I assume that the appropriations asked for by the President will be forthcoming some time between now and July 1, but whenever they are forthcoming and whenever they are available, it will be necessary for those who are producing airplanes to be in a position to produce them as rapidly as the Government of the United States may desire or need them. If we are not in the position to do that at the present time, if by perfectly lawful sale of airplanes to other nations that have the money to buy them and that can come here and get them, we can so improve the facilities for manufacturing planes for our own use against the time when we will need them, and may have the money to pay for them. I myself do not see any valid objection that can be urged against that course. It is not a violation of any treaty, it is not a violation of the neutrality law, but it is in compliance with the immemorial custom and usages of international law.

We might as well say that the United States Steel Co. in time of peace ought not to be allowed to sell steel or iron to England, or France, or any other nation that has money to come here and pay for it and carry it away for fear that at some time in the future such steel might be used in the manufacture of armaments in the foreign country to be used in a war that may be in prospect in years to come. I myself see no difference between the lawful sale of airplanes to any country that wants them and has the money to buy them and the sale of steel or any other product of ours that might by some process of transformation finally be developed into some form of military equipment which might be used in time of war. Therefore, I do not fear that the American Government is justly chargeable by consenting to the sale by private industry of airplanes to the French Government, when we are not in a position, as I believe, to purchase them ourselves because Congress has not as yet made any money available, certainly not to the extent asked by the President, with taking action in any way involving the country in any future war or that it is guilty of any conduct that is detrimental to our own defense. On the contrary, I think it would facilitate our own defense if and when the time comes for the production of the planes which our country will need, private industry will be ready to turn them out as rapidly as our country shall need them.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If it is true as the Senator from Kentucky indicates—and I think it is true—that there ought to be no criticism whatever of the commercial transaction at the moment between France and the United States, why is it necessary that this procedure should go on in secret?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not understand that it is going on in secret. The newspapers have been full of it; the President has indicated it in press conferences and otherwise. There may be some features of the conversation that, in the interest of a proper understanding and a lack of hysteria, ought to be divulged. I do not know about that; I am not a military man; I am not in on the secrets of the military authorities; but I myself do not see that there has been any secrecy. The only secrecy that I have been told about is the fact that the Frenchman in the plane that crashed did not divulge his true name. Why he did not do so I do not know.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, the majority leader, has just given a full, adequate, complete, and classical illustration of the objections to secret hearings which were pointed out heretofore by the Senator from North Dakota and myself and several other Senators.

The Senator from Kentucky rises on the floor with the tongues of the members of the committee tied to refer to the actual testimony taken in secret session, and he says, "I assume such and such is the state of facts," and, "if it be true that such and such a state of facts exists, then I think so-and-so," and "then the following conclusion must follow."

Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky gave a complete demonstration of the fact that either he has some confidential information from some source which is at variance with the testimony before the Military Affairs Committee or else he is "talking through his hat" and talking about something that he knows nothing about.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am neither divulging nor talking about any confidential information that I have that has been divulged to the Military Affairs Committee, neither am I "talking through my hat," the opinion of the Senator from Missouri to the contrary notwithstanding. I am talking about things that have been in the newspapers of this country, which are available to everybody, that planes are proposed to be sold to France. Everybody in the country knows that the President has asked for an additional appropriation; everybody knows that it is not available; and everybody knows that it will not be available until the Congress appropriates it. There is nothing confidential or secret about that. Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will ask the Senator to wait for a moment in order that I may answer the Senator from Kentucky. If the Senator from Kentucky had even read the newspapers with as much diligence as he now professes, he would know that the plane which crashed at Los Angeles was a plane being designed-and the only plane being designedby a great airplane firm for entry in the War Department competition and I am now referring to the newspapers and not to the confidential communications of the Military Affairs Committee; but even the Senator from Kentucky would know that that was a special design by one of a number of American airplane manufacturers, intended for entry in the War Department competition, embodying possibly the latest and most desirable features of airplane construction; and if the Senator from Kentucky will permit the record to be published, or assist in permitting the record to be published, he will discover that some very eminent authorities in the United States protested against the sale of that plane to any foreign country before it was adopted for the uses of the United States.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President-

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like to ask the Senator, first, if prior to the newspaper article describing the wreck of the plane he has just mentioned the Senator from Missouri had seen anything in the newspapers in regard to the French transaction?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say that I had not.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Then I ask the Senator, in reference to secrecy, whether the American people would have known anything whatever in reference to the purchase and sale of these 600 planes if there had not been a wreck.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So far as I know, they would not. Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. In other words, as I understand the Senator, this transaction—the sale of 600 planes to the French Government—would have been carried out, and the planes would have been delivered, without the American people having known anything whatever about it, had not the wreck occurred?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course, that involves a matter of assumption. So far as I know, the Senator from North Carolina is entirely correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one question connected with that subject? I do not want to take his time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I indicated awhile ago, there are many things that the American people may sell to any government in time of peace that may ultimately be used in war. So far as I recall, there has never been any widespread publicity or any demand for publicity with respect to the transactions that take place between an American private industry and any country in the world that may buy anything in time of peace that may be lawfully bought, regardless of the ultimate use to be made of it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Kentucky. He is a very distinguished Member of the Senate of the United States. He is the majority leader. He is the confident of presidents and secretaries, and certainly his standing as an American citizen is most unimpeachable.

Let the Senator from Kentucky go to one of these airplane manufacturers and say, "I understand you have here a plane which is to be entered in the War Department competition next month or 2 months from now. I want to get on it and take a ride." They will say, "Well, Senator, we know you are a good American. We know you are a good citizen. We know you are a distinguished United States Senator, the leader of the majority party in that great body; but you will have to go to the War Department and get an order to allow you on that plane. Of course, we are independent producers; of course, we have a right to sell our airplanes anywhere we please; but, Senator, out of respect to our patriotic obligations to the Government of the United States, you will have to go and get a pass from the Secretary of War or the Chief of Staff before you can get on this plane."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I am not in the airplane market.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand that.

Mr. BARKLEY. And I am not likely to be in the near future.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I agree with the Senator on that proposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. But if I were, either as a private individual or as a Government official, in the market to purchase airplanes, I assume it would be a matter of ordinary business prudence to know what sort of a plane I was buying.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I assume so.

Mr. BARKLEY. If it is necessary for me or for any foreigner to get the permission of the War Department to inspect a plane in order to determine whether or not I want to buy it, is there anything really very unusual about it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. O, Mr. President, the Senator is begging the question.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I am not begging the question. The

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Wait just a minute. I have the floor. The Senator from Kentucky answered the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] just a moment ago by saying that the Senator from California was claiming that there was something unusual in this proceeding, when in truth and fact the Senator from Kentucky said there was not. Mr. President, I assert, and I defy successful contradiction, that it is not only unusual but unprecedented in the history of this country for a proposal to be made to sell a plane that might be the very latest development, the last word, to be used—

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator-

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I insist that I have the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not deny that. I am asking the Senator to yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator never asked me to yield. The Senator interjected a remark at the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON]. I heard what the Senator from Indiana said.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Indiana did not suggest to me to ask the Senator from Missouri a question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator wants me to yield—

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator will contain his soul in patience until I myself have a chance to make a statement in my own time, I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky for as much of my time as he desires to occupy.

Mr. President, I say that what I was referring to was the fact that the Senator from Kentucky stated that the remarks of the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] were ill-advised, because the Senator from California suggested there was something unusual in this proceeding. As I was about to say when I was interrupted by the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Indiana, I myself assert, and challenge successful contradiction, that never before in the history of this country has it happened that a proposal was seriously made to sell what might be the very latest development in any branch of the art of warfare to any foreign country, friendly or otherwise, if there was a possibility that it might be necessary and useful for the defense of the United States.

I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in the first place I wish to correct the Senator from Missouri in the assumption and the statement that I asked him to yield at the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Minton].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; the Senator did not ask me to yield at all. He interjected a remark in the middle of a sentence.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was trying to ask the Senator to yield. I am sufficiently active on my feet that I do not have to be prodded by the Senator from Indiana in order to rise and ask a Senator to yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say to the Senator that I myself thought it was gilding the lily. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not the lily of the valley, at least.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President-

Mr. BARKLEY. In the first place, I rose to refer to the remarks of the Senator from California on an entirely different premise than that stated by the Senator from Missouri. That was that while we are undertaking to fulfill the requirements of a foreign country in the purchase of airplanes, we are postponing the fulfillment of our own requirements. That is what I undertook to correct.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the record of the Committee on Military Affairs can be made public, I shall be very glad completely to explode that theory of the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. All right. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to abide by the judgment of the Military Affairs Committee as to whether the record shall be made public.

In the next place, a while ago the Senator said that I was begging the question because he had suggested me as a possible purchaser of airplanes, and I was simply telling him the ordinary precaution I would take if I were a purchaser. In doing that I probably exaggerated my own importance by making a comparison with a foreign country; but I was in no sense begging the question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator entirely misunderstood me. I never accused the Senator from Kentucky of being in the market for airplanes. I am certain he would not buy an ariplane or ride in one. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I could not buy one, and I have no intention of buying one; but I can ride in one, and I have many times ridden in them without the slightest effect upon my health or my disposition. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am glad to hear the Senator say that.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President-

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Kentucky seem to be laboring under a great deal of difficulty, in that one apparently has not been attending the sessions of the Military Affairs Committee and the other seems to be under some difficulty in not being able to tell what has been going on in the sessions of the Military Affairs Committee. The thought I have in mind is that whatever is going on there, with the exception of an occasional remark, is being taken down stenographically, and I assume that in time all of it will be available to the Members of the Senate. I cannot agree with the Senator from Missouri, as to a certain proceeding with reference to the Douglas airplane out in Los Angeles, that it was a wholly unusual proceeding, or that there was a disclosure or that there was opportunity to disclose anything that was secret about that plane; but I labor under the same difficulties as does the Senator from Missouri. I suppose if we stand here long enough, and talk back and forth long enough, it will not be necessary to print the proceedings of the Military Affairs Committee. I believe, however, that Senators might wait until the hearings are concluded and until the record is made available, and then we shall all know whether the distinguished Senator from Missouri is right, or whether the Senator from Kentucky is guessing accurately, or whether I am right or wrong in disagreeing with the Senator from Missouri in some of the conclusions which may be drawn from what has taken place in the committee.

It seems to me we may well rest our souls content until we get the full record before us, and then we shall know whether anybody is entitled to criticism or whether anybody is entitled to praise.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wyoming for his speech injected into the middle of my few remarks.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am desolated that the Senator from Wyoming does not agree with my view of the general situation. I return, however, despite the views of the Senator from Wyoming, to the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky with regard to the remarks of the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson]; and I again refer to something which I learned from the columns of the public press, from statements made by the various witnesses testifying before the Military Affairs Committee, and from the chairman of the committee, I think, in their own proper persons, which I understand not to be tied down by the rules of secret testimony.

With reference to what was said by the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson], I again state that never before has there been an instance such as this, in which a plane or any other prospective instrument of war for use in the United States Army, largely developed and promoted and paid for by the research of the United States Army with appropriations made by Congress for the War Department from public funds, has been turned over to any foreign nation before the United States had procured its full need of the instrument in question, and developed to the fullest possibility its potential uses.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the particular airplane which fell was one which had been built practically for the United States Government.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Partly paid for by the United States Government, as I learn from the public press.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Partly paid for by the United States Government; that it had on it certain gadgets, sights I remember as one of them, which were taken off, were they not, so that they would not be apparent to the French?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I did not see anything in any newspaper about that, so I am unable to answer the question.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I saw it in the newspapers. I am not a member of the committee; I do not know anything about it except what I have read in the newspapers, so I am not afraid to say, and I can say with perfect good faith, that there was that sort of report in the newspapers; and is it not correct?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senate will release the testimony given before the Military Affairs Committee, I shall be exceedingly happy to answer that question.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Before the Senator concludes, permit me to say that there is proof positive about what this plane was. What is the use of telling us a bedtime story here, however prettily it may be told? There is proof positive of what this plane was, and a foreign nation was taking it over, a citizen of that country driving in it, determining whether or not they would take it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I understand there will be no controversy at all about the fact that this was a plane being developed partly by the expenditure of research funds by the United States Government, in the drawing of specifications and plans, which was to have been entered in the competition next month, and which possibly involves the very latest development of the American aviation science in a military plane.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, naturally I have listened with considerable interest to the debate which has occurred here this afternoon, all of which grew out of an initial mention of secret sessions. I have been particularly interested because I happen to be sufficiently fortunate to serve on the Committee on Military Affairs, over which my distinguished and lovable colleague from the great State of Texas [Mr. Suppage] presides very ably.

Mr. President, the impression I have secured from week to week since I entered the Senate in 1932 has been that in secret sessions one was expected to be provided with secret information, that is to say, such information as one could not receive otherwise. The only two sessions of secrecy, so to speak, which have been mentioned here today were those participated in by the members of the Committees on Military Affairs of both the House and the Senate, at which time our very able representative at Paris, the capital of France, testified, and likewise at that time was given the testimony of our representative at the Court of St. James's. The only other secret meeting I have been called upon to attend, within my recent recollection, was that which has been discussed so fully here this afternoon, a meeting of the Military Affairs Committee.

I am perfectly frank in stating, in reference to the first meeting which I mentioned a moment ago, the meeting at which our representative at the Court of St. James's, Mr. Kennedy, and our representative at Paris, Mr. Bullitt, addressed us by way of an explanation—and this statement, I am confident, will be concurred in by all the Members of the committee who were present—that there was revealed to us no information with which the members of the committee were not familiar. As a matter of fact, I believe I could state quite accurately that there were not any revelations made there which we would particularly care to keep from the American public. I see in the Chamber at this moment the chairman of the committee, as well as other members of the committee, and I believe I can state without contradiction that nothing was revealed in the meeting which should not by right be provided in the form of information to the American people.

This debate has brought up the question of America becoming involved in war. It has brought about the statement by the able Senator from Illinois with reference to a declaration made by the Prime Minister of England. It has brought up the question of national defense. All these things interest us, one might say, in the prospect of America unfortunately becoming involved in war.

In this regard I wish to provide myself with the opportunity of again warning the people of America that if we become involved in war, we may put it in our pipes and smoke it well that involvement in war, if at all we are so involved, will be occasioned by the war which is raging in this country today, a political war between the Nazis and the Fascists and the Communists. I warn the American people that the Nazis and Fascists have provided from their atmosphere nothing more nor less than a smoke screen, and that smoke screen has been fashioned in the minds of the American people by the propagandists employed, astute as they are, by the Communists.

It is beyond my comprehension that daily through the columns of the press, and, as a matter of fact, from the lips of public officials in this country, we are constantly reading and hearing about the dictators of the world, the Nazis and the Fascists. We hear only about them, and the great damage they are doing, and what they are endeavoring to do, at the same time realizing that of all the reptiles upon the face of the earth communism is the worst. We neglect to tell the American people that the termites which are boring from within are the Communists themselves.

In other words, Mr. President, I say to all true Americans that those in this land who are opposed to dictators, those in this land who are opposed to those countries in Europe under the direction of dictators, are constantly throwing up the smoke screen of dictatorship, the Nazis and the Fascists, in order to distract the minds of the American people away from the reptile itself, the reptile of communism.

I remember that just a few years ago the American people were talking about communism sweeping this country. The American people were fearful that the time would come when the Communists would perhaps be in a position to overthrow and destroy our form of government. But within the past several months, particularly within the past 2 years, certainly we have not heard so much about communism. But we are hearing more criticism directed toward the Fascist and the Nazi countries of Europe.

I wish at this time to bring to the attention of this body another matter, but before doing so I wish to say that it is unfortunate for the American people that they are becoming divided as the result of the sides they are taking in issues in Europe, in which issues we have no interest. In other words, we, the American people, have become of late so thoroughly and passionately interested in the issues of Europe, in Germany, and in Spain, that we are a house divided, the result of which is that the war that is being waged in this country is bringing about destruction of our land at the time of all times when we need solidification of the patriotism of all Americans.

A few days ago I brought to the attention of this body a clipping from one of the New York newspapers revealing the fact that more than 500 aliens, professional men and women, were seeking the opportunity to practice their respective professions in the United States of America. In my discourse on that occasion I brought to the attention of the Members of the Senate the fact that many of those professional men and women, who found that they would have to pass an examination set by the Board of Regents of the State of New York, had learned that they could not pass that rigid examination, and they had the gall and the audacity, foreigners as they were, aliens as they were at the time, to say to the American people, "We will break down your standards. We will not abide by your rules, but we who have come from foreign shores will carry this question to the Supreme Court of the United States, if necessary, because we think we should be permitted to practice by comity."

Think of the gall of that! But listen to the Communists speaking. The other day I picked up a copy of the Congressional Record of January 27, 1939. And here is what I read:

Mr. Maloney (of Connecticut) presented a resolution adopted at a Lenin—at a Lenin memorial meeting held by the Communist Party at Waterbury, Conn., favoring the dissolution of the so-called Dies committee, being the Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities [House of Representatives], which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Listen to this-

The Communists of this country and other elements in this country are doing their best to involve the United States in a war with Germany, and I say that if we, the American people, become involved in a war with Germany, we will lay its cost to the Communists of the United States and other elements that want to crush and destroy and murder every one of the 80,000,000 people in Germany on account of certain things which have taken place within the confines of Germany. And mark me, if we become involved in a war, if the sons of American mothers are again dragged into a bloody conflict that will take the lives of American citizens, Senators may now chalk it down, and will then remember what I said, that war will be laid to the Communists of this country and other elements that want to murder the people of Germany.

Let us see about that. We are talking about war more and more every day. Who wants to get us into war? We all know that the Communists want us to go to war with the Fascist states because there is rivalry, because there is bitter enmity, there is no love lost between the Communist countries and the dictator countries.

Where does Russia stand today? Russia stands four-square behind China, which is two-thirds communistic, ruled over by the Communists, as everyone knows, and fighting against one of those nations constituting the "unholy" alliance of Japan, Germany, and Italy. We have lost sight of the fact that those constituting the Communist Party in America are doing their level best to get us into war. I warn the American people that we will have to "watch our p's and q's" and be as wary as we as a people can be in order to avoid being drawn into another world conflict.

I was thinking about that very matter a moment ago as I sat in my seat listening to the debate which was taking place in the Senate, and I was trying to answer to my own satisfaction a question which arose in my mind. The question was this: We have just sold to France 600 planes. The Senators upon the floor of the Senate who discussed the subject agreed that there was nothing wrong in our selling planes to any country in the world which was not at war. Let us suppose that we sell the 600 planes to France, and we sell 1,000 or 1,200 planes to Great Britain; that we sell 500 planes to Belgium, 800 planes to Holland; and then suppose Italy comes along-Italy is not at war-and Germany comes along-Germany is not war-and Hungary comes along-and Hungary is not at war, but is an ally of Germany-and Yugoslavia comes along, a country which is divided in its alliance between Italy and Germany Suppose those latter countries should decide to buy planes from us in their preparation for a war in Europe, and we refused to sell them planes. I ask each Senator, what would be the consequence?

The consequence would be that by selling planes to France and Great Britain and Belgium and Holland we would have lined ourselves up, from the military standpoint, with those nations of Europe against the others, and without intending to, and though hopeful that we would never become involved, we would unintentionally have become involved from a military standpoint.

Let me return to the question of communism. The other day in a Senate reading room I picked up a copy of the New York Times, and this is what I read:

Twenty thousand at "red" rally on Lenin death day. Send plea to Washington for end of Spain embargo.

This was on January 24. The article continues:

Observing the fifteenth anniversary of the death of Lenin, 20,000 Communists and sympathizers, filling Madison Square Garden last night, signed a "collective telegram" urging an end of the arms embargo against Loyalist Spain, heard party leaders warn that the country and the world faced a "serious offensive of reaction," and witnessed a musical play presented to illustrate America's "revolutionary tradition."

"revolutionary tradition."

The speakers, including William Z. Foster, national chairman of the Communist Party, just returned from Cuba; Israel Amter, State chairman; James W. Ford and Elizabeth Gurley Flynn assailed the Republican Party, the Dies committee, the "financial oligarchy", the "poisonous priest in Detroit", and others as attempting to lead the United States into fascism. The meeting adopted resolutions urging passage of the full W. P. A. appropriation presented by President Roosevelt, and asking an end of the Dies committee.

Here we find 20,000 Communists, 20,000 "reds," 20,000 from the Soviet Union, engaged in preaching the overthrow and the destruction of our form of government, there in observance of the fifteenth anniversary of the death of Lenin himself, demanding that there be no more investigations of un-American activities by the Dies committee, the committee headed by that able and courageous Representative in the House from the State of Texas.

In that connection I may express the hope that there will be no hesitancy about the granting of appropriation of an additional $100,000 or $150,000 in order that the fine work of the Dies committee may be carried on, in order that the 130,000,000 people of America may be acquainted with what today is taking place in the United States. I thank God that the American people are awakening at last to the fact that they have been giving too much attention to the fights that have been going on in this country between the "isms," communism and fascism and nazi-ism. What the American people should do from now on is to give consideration to their own Americanism, and from now on I trust sincerely that we in this country shall hear of nothing except Americanism, so far as our own country is concerned.

Day in and day out we read through the columns of the press what the Nazis are doing, what the Fascists are doing, and what the Communists are doing. And right in New York we find the Communists holding a rally. The Communists hate the Nazis. The Communists hate the Fascists. Stalin, Lenin's successor, despises Hitler. Stalin despises Mussolini. Stalin would like to see them both in their graves, and their respective Governments destroyed. And so it is likewise on the other hand. I dare say that Hitler and Mussolini both hate and despise Stalin and would gladly see him in the grave. They hate one another. And therefore we find the Communists and other elements in this country praying that the United States of America shall become involved in war with the Fascist states of Europe, because the Communists want the United States to shoulder the responsibility of war with their enemies. All such movements should be stopped.

A moment ago I said that if we become involved in war, someone will be responsible. Men are going through the length and breadth of this land of ours advocating the position that we must fight, and are saying that we in the United States must destroy the Fascist nations of Europe.

I cite one newspaper clipping in substantiation of my statement. "All I know is what I read in the papers." I read from the World-Telegram of January 27:

"We must fight," says pacifist.

Who says we must fight? The American people do not want to fight. They want to avoid a war. They had enough of it from April 6, 1917, until November 11, 1918. We still remember that it cost the taxpayers of America $69,000,000,000. We know that before we shall have finished paying it will have cost $100,000,000.000. We do not want to get into another war. We want to live peacefully upon our portion of the North American continent in the Western Hemisphere.

But there are within our midst those who say we must fight. We must destroy Hitler and Mussolini, so say the Communists. The newspaper clipping says that statement was made by a pacifist. Who was it?-

Erika Mann says Nazis and Fascists make it necessary.

Who is this individual who says to the people of the United States that we must fight? Who is this individual who says to the American mothers, "Your sons must don the uniform and shoulder arms and go forth and murder and defeat the Nazis and the Fascists"? Let us see who it is.

This article is by Miss Sally MacDougall.

Erika Mann-

I do not know who Erika Mann is-

Erika Mann believes that if the members of the Conference of the Cause and Cure of War could have spent several weeks in Spain when she was there last fall it would not have taken them until this week to indict the neutrality law as a contributing factor in the world's war and strife.

I do not know who Erika Mann is; but, whoever Erika Mann is, Erika Mann says our neutrality law is all wrong. It is not right. It ought to be changed, because Erika Mann insinuates that we long since should have removed the Spanish embargo in order that the Loyalists might have the advantage of purchasing arms, ammunition, and munitions of war from this country.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I assume the Senator is discussing propaganda in this country urging our country to take sides with the democratic governments of Europe against the totalitarian states.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Exactly.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the Senator what assurance any American has that France will remain democratic, that Great Britain will remain democratic, or that Hitler's or Mussolini's form of government may not change within the next few years?

Mr. REYNOLDS. None whatever, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. Then why should we attempt to take sides because it appears at this time that some of the countries of Europe have a better form of government for their people than we think other countries have? Is not the position we ought to take one of absolute, unmistakable neutrality? It seems to me it is none of our business what form of government the countries of Europe have, and that we ought to keep away from their rivalries and hatreds, mind our own affairs, and defend our own democracy before we attempt to defend other democracies. Mr. REYNOLDS. Absolutely, Mr. President. From the bottom of my heart I thank the able Senator from the historic Commonwealth of Massachusetts for his fine, patriotic contribution of good sound "horse sense," as we say down South. I thank the Senator for his expression here today. He has given utterance to the very thing I have been preaching throughout the length and breadth of this land for the past several years. Thank God for the patriot from the great State of Massachusetts, and for his contribution here today. What right have we to tell any country in the world the form of government under which its nationals should live? Again I say that Uncle Sam, poor old ragged fellow that he is now, kicked all around the world, trying to regulate the morals of the people of the earth, at last is coming home to find 12,000,000 of his nieces and his nephews out of work, in rags, undernourished, and walking the streets in search of employment, warmth, and raiment. Now that he is here, I hope that while we have Uncle Sam with us we will wash behind his ears, and not let him stray farther from our shores, because we want Uncle Sam to clean his own house and sweep the dust therefrom before he tells the other peoples of the world how to run their governments. We Americans are all with the Senator from Massachusetts when he says we should attend to our own

Mr. WALSH rose.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Before yielding again to my distinguished friend, I will say that I, for one of the 130,000,000 people of America, insist upon our "dear old uncle" keeping his nose out of the business of other countries in the world.

I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. With conditions as they are in this country, I am sure the Senator and I are in accord in believing that we have all we can do to protect and defend our own democracy by adequate national defense, instead of meddling in other countries' business and trying to determine which is right and which is wrong. Who can rightly claim that we are foreordained by the Almighty to determine where truth and justice, honesty, and good government exist in the world and then fight to preserve it? If we are going into that business, we shall be in trouble for all time, our youths will be on battlefields everywhere, and we will be useless as a potential factor in preserving the civilization of the world and in protecting the welfare of our own people.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Again I thank the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I rose for another purpose. It so happens that on December 22, 1938, I was invited to deliver an address on the inauguration of the New England town meeting of the air in Boston. The subject assigned me at that time was Neutrality. With the Senator's kind permission, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the Record the speech I made on that occasion, which expresses more elaborately the sentiments I expressed a few minutes ago.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very happy to yield, particularly for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the speech may be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. REYNOLDS. At this juncture I respectfully invite the attention of all the Members of the Senate, and particularly the attention of every reader of the Congressional Record, to the speech made by the Senator at the time mentioned, which, in accordance with his request, will be published in the Appendix of the Record. I know the readers thereof will find it thoroughly inspirational and informative. I only regret that I was not fortunate enough to be among those present when the Senator addressed an audience which I know was an appreciative one.

Returning to the newspaper clipping, Mr. President, this person says we must fight. The name is Erika Mann. I do not know who Erika Mann is; but Erika Mann says our neutrality laws are wrong. Erika Mann must be a great patriot, a member of some legislative body, or a great lawyer, who has studied the laws of our country, because Erika Mann is not hesitant about condemning the laws which Congress has passed. Erika Mann does not hesitate a moment about criticizing the action of the United States of America.

Let us go further and see what Erika Mann says:

"It is too late now," she regretted, "for decisions like these to help the loyalists in Spain. Had it not been for the nonintervention program, the tragedy that is at its height in Barcelona today might have been averted."

Erika Mann said, in criticism of the United States Government, that if we had not carried out the policy of nonintervention and the sort of neutrality we wanted, there would not have been any tragedy at Barcelona.

Who is Erika Mann, who without hesitation criticizes and condemns the Congress of the United States? Who is Erika Mann, who says that we, the people of the United States of America, must fight?

Let me read further. Erika Mann says:

"One cannot be a pacifist today in the former sense," said the serious brunette daughter of Thomas Mann, who said that her one purpose in life is to work for the downfall of fascism within the next 2 years.

I do not know who Mr. Thomas Mann is.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me at that point?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Thomas Mann is a very famous author. He has recently written a book entitled "The Triumph of Democracy."

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Triumph of Democracy?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Where is Mr. Mann now? Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know. I have not seen him; I never saw him.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Where is Mr. Mann from?

Mr. BARKLEY. He was, I think, born in Germany.

Mr. REYNOLDS. He was born in Germany? How long has Mr. Mann been in the United States?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from North Carolina ought to know that, because he has information about all aliens.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, he is an alien?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know. I think probably he is.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, he is an alien?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think he is.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The majority leader tells me that Mr. Thomas Mann is an alien.

Mr. BARKLEY. He was an alien.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And so the daughter of an alien in America is criticizing the Members of this body and telling the people of the United States that we must go to war and murder Hitler and the whole outfit. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not acquainted with Mr. Mann personally, but I know he has written this book and written other books. I do not know whether he has taken out his first papers or whether he has become a citizen, but my understanding is that he was born in Germany.

Mr. REYNOLDS. How did he happen to come to this country?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know. I have no information about it. The Senator asked who he was and I was trying to

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like to know something about his form of democracy and if it is the same kind of democracy that he expounds in the pages of his book that has been observed by his daughter who comes here as an alien and tells us what we have got to do, namely, that we have got to beat hell out of Hitler. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President-

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am delighted to yield to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I shall disturb my friend from North Carolina merely to observe that Professor Mann, to whom he refers, achieved fame with us for his work on Joseph and His Brothers, a wondrous description of the rise and the movement of the Jewish people. I think Professor Mann is of Jewish birth, and, as my able colleague from Kentucky says, he was born in Germany.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator from Illinois and I shall always be indebted to the senior Senator from Kentucky for the information which he has provided.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Carolina will yield further, in this book Mr. Mann takes the position that democracy will ultimately prevail in spite of what now seems to be in many parts of the world an unfriendly atmosphere toward it. There is nothing strange about his theory compared to the theories of others who believe that in spite of present difficulties democracies will yet prevail in the world. That is the general theme of his book. It may be that his book has been superinduced by reason of the persecutions that have occurred in Germany with respect to his particular race. I am drawing my own conjecture in making that statement, but I have stated the general theme of the book which he has written.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Not having been provided with an opportunity of perusing the pages of that book pertaining to democracy, may I inquire whether or not Dr. Mann draws any distinction between the so-called democracy of Soviet Russia and that of the United States?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Mann's book does not go into a distinction between what the Senator calls the democracy of Soviet Russia. I myself would not call it such; I think it is as much a dictatorship as may be found anywhere.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I said "so-called democracy." I have never described the Russian form of government as a democracy. Some, however, do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well, I make that correction. The theory of the book to which reference has been made is not woven around the difference between the form of government of Russia and that of the United States. It is based upon what seems to be the belief of the author that not only here but throughout the world the theory of democracy—that is, the right of the people to rule, to govern themselves, to have a voice in their government-will prevail in spite of the difficulties which now seem to beset it. That is the general sentiment of the book.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator recognize any similarity between the propaganda at the present time in this country urging us to join forces with the democracies of Europe to protect our own democracy and the propaganda which preceded the World War?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Most certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Let me ask the Senator another question. What is the purpose, what is the objective of those urging us to abandon our neutrality and take sides with foreign democracies unless it be trade interests, business interests, or complete disregard of the lives of American people and their future prosperity and welfare? It surely is not in the interest of peace and the avoidance of war.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is complete disregard of the lives of the American people and their future, I answer the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator, and I should like to see all those who are promulgating such propaganda put in the front line to face the enemy if they get us into war through the abandonment of every principle of neutrality.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And I should like to see all those who are promulgating this propaganda placed where they could not continue propaganda that perhaps will eventually drag us into war.

Mr. President, here is the daughter of an alien, I am told, who is sore at Hitler and the people of Germany. Mind you, Mr. President, I am interested only in one country in all the world, and that is the United States of America. But here is the daughter of an alien who comes to this country seeking asylum and protection who has the audacity to say we must fight, who has the audacity to criticize the Members of the Congress for the laws they have passed, who has the audacity to criticize the administration for the administration of the neutrality law.

I speak feelingly about this subject, Mr. President, because I do not want the United States to become involved in another war. I say to you, Mr. President, that if we should become involved in another war such involvement may be attributed to such people as I bring to your attention here today, who are not American citizens, according to the information I have upon the floor of the Senate, but, although they are not American citizens, they are demanding that the sons of American mothers be placed in uniform and under arms to strike down those in continental Europe whom they do not like.

Let me read further:

"One cannot be a pacifist today in the former sense," said the serious brunette daughter of Thomas Mann, who said that her one purpose in life is to work for the downfall of fascism within the next 2 years.

Think of it, Senators! This lady says that she has but one ambition in life, that her only ambition upon this earth is to bring about the downfall and destruction of fascism within the next 2 years. And how? By spilling the blood of sons of American mothers to satisfy her hatred of Hitler and the Nazi Government. She says:

I have no hesitancy in calling for the blood of the sons of American mothers just so I can get even with that government which I despise.

Think of it, Senators!

I wish to read the remainder of this article, and I extend no apologies to anybody for consuming the time upon the floor of the Senate in talking about this subject today, because it is more important to the American people than any other subject. War! Let us see about it.

To be a pacifist in the old way, to declare that we wouldn't fight under any circumstances, is to help the Fascist and Nazi program.

We are criticized; it is said that we are yellow feathered, that we have a yellow streak up our backs, because we will not go to war right now with Germany and Italy. I want to ask Senators something, and I invite any Member of this body to answer the question. If there is an answer to it I want to hear it, and I want the American people to hear it. The American people today are more thoroughly aroused than ever before.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President-

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Washington. Mr. BONE. Where did the young lady make this speech?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will say to the Senator that I clipped this article from the New York World-Telegram. It appears on page 14 of that newspaper. The address must have been made in New York. The article is by Miss Sally MacDougall.

Mr. BONE. The speech was made by the daughter of Thomas Mann?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; by the daughter of Thomas Mann. Let us see what was said:

To be a pacifist in the old way, to declare that we wouldn't fight under any circumstances, is to help the Fascist and Nazi program.

I have commented upon that.

The sacrifice we must make to our principles is to admit that world conditions today demand an attitude of aggression.

Senators, think of that! Think of that! We are criticizing the nations of the earth for their aggressions, and yet this person who speaks through the columns of the press says we must make aggressions for the sake of humanity, regardless of the amount of blood to be spilled or the number of lives to be lost.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to my friend from New Jersey.

Mr. BARBOUR. The Senator from North Carolina has been, I am glad to say, directing a number of his remarks to me, or at least he was good enough to look at me while he was indulging in those remarks. I hope the Senator does not feel that I am in any way in conflict with his views. I feel as strongly as he does that if there is one thing about which all Americans agree, it is that we shall mind our own business and keep out of all foreign entanglements of any sort. That is my own personal conviction also.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much; and I want to tell him the reason why I looked at him.

I am very fond of the Senator from New Jersey, the Honorable W. Warren Barbour. I have a picture of him made when he was a youngster, just a few years ago, in a fighting costume. At the time the picture was made he was the champion heavyweight fighter of the world; and I always like to look at him, because he provides me with strength and with inspiration.

Mr. BARBOUR. I thank the Senator very much for his very kind reference to my old boxing days. My spirit, I think, perhaps is the same, though my chest may have slipped down a little since those early days. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from North Carolina may need inspiration, but nobody in this Chamber thinks he needs strength. [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much. I only wish, Mr. President, that my voice were sufficiently strong to reach the ears of every man, woman, and child residing within the confines of the United States, because I want the 130,000,000 people of America, and particularly the mothers of America, to know that among those who are pushing us into war are those who, I am advised, are not even American citizens, and the others are Communists.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Washington. Mr. BONE. I should like to have the Senator's view as to whether or not he thinks we are—to use his own term—minding our own business when we sell military airplanes to any country, including France and England.

I do not want to embarrass the Senator if he does not care to answer the question.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I say to the Senator from Washington that I see no reason why we should not sell to whoever wishes to buy. If we sell to one, being neutral, we of necessity must sell to another; and if we sell to one and refuse to sell to another, that is lining ourselves up with one side or the other. That is my reasoning.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, may I intrude again upon the Senator's address?

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is no intrusion. I shall be very happy to have the benefit of the Senator's observations, because, knowing the Senator as I do, I realize that he is particularly interested in the matters under discussion, for he comes from a part of the country which probably contributes more to the fleets of the air than does any other section of the United States, and probably contributes as much to the Navy and to the Coast Guard as any other section of the United States. At Lake Washington there is a great naval port. When I was there last fall, as the Senator will recall, I saw about 400 planes come in there one day from different sections of the country; and the Senator is not far removed from the Bremerton section, where there are great shipbuilding yards, and from the location of the Boeing plane plant.

I am glad to yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. Merely to keep the record straight, and so that the American people may have no misunderstanding about this matter or have any illusions whatever left, let it be known that shortly after Hitler came into power in Germany American airplane manufacturers began to arm Hitler and the new Germany in the air; and the great air fleet built up in Germany was in no small degree the product of American airplane factories. If Hitler has become a menace in the air and a menace to Europe and any blame or responsibility is to attach to the commercial aspects of that sort of business, the blame must rest upon American airplane manufacturers, for the records of the Senate Munitions Committee are replete with that picture. Probably 2,500 of the finest airplane engines made in this country were sent into Germany to arm Hitler in the air, in defiance of the clear provisions of the Versailles Treaty. American airplane patents covering the latest devices on airplane engines were freely given to Germany and were being manufactured by the Bavarian Motor Works in Germany.

I should like to have the Record show those facts, because long before this issue was raised on the floor of the Senate at this particular session and at the last session American airplane manufacturers were arming Mr. Hitler in the air as completely as he was able to pay for the equipment; and if he became a menace to Europe we made our contribution to that menace.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And he then, according to my recollection, could buy all the airplane engines he desired, or paraphernalia connected therewith, if he had the money with which to pay for them; if he was able to put the money "on the line," as it is called.

Mr. BONE. That is correct.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Since the Senator has mentioned our contribution to Germany's arming, and now we have criticism of her, if I may be permitted to shift the scene briefly to the Senator's section of the world—or, I should say, to oriental waters—it is my recollection that prior to 1860 Japan was a hermit nation. The Japanese were not dealing generally with the world. We had an admiral of the Navy by the name of Perry. We had been endeavoring to get Japan to trade with the world. England had tried; other nation of the world had made efforts but were not successful. The Japanese wanted to remain a hermit nation, purely nationalistic and self-sufficient within themselves. Then our Government sent Perry on a ship, accompanied by a couple of others, with instructions to open up the gates of commerce of Japan.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. With reference to what the Senator said a moment ago to the effect that if we sell to one nation we should sell to all, it is also true, is it not, that we sell planes and have sold planes to Russia and also to England and France, and that during the past year we have sold scrap iron, airplane engines, and parts to Japan?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Absolutely. I thank the Senator. We have been selling everywhere. This is not a new thing.

But getting back to Japan, we opened up the gates of that country. Admiral Perry had instructions to open them up or tear them down. He sent a few little presents, and said some honeyed words, and indulged in a fine line of conversation, and he was successful where the other nations of the world had not been successful. The Japanese began to trade, and then we became involved in civil strife, and the other nations of the world walked in and were trading with Japan. When the Civil War was over we went back, and we found that vessels flying the Japanese flag were sailing the seven seas, and we said to Japan, "Now, listen: You have a marine that ought to be protected. You ought to have a battleship to protect your marine." They said, "We do not want any battleship. We are a peaceful nation." We said, "You will have one, or we will blow you out of the water." We made Japan buy a battleship, and then along came England and did the same thing, and now we are telling them they cannot have anything.

I mention these facts because the Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone] a moment ago referred to our selling planes to Hitler; and, as the able Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Schwartz] has just remarked, Japan has cleaned up all the backyards in the United States by buying the scrap iron; and once upon a time the Japanese bought about all the cotton we had in the South. In one year, I think, we sold them about 115 or 120 million dollars' worth of cotton, but now we are not selling much.

Let me pursue the newspaper clipping further. This is the most remarkable thing that has come into my hands for a long while. By the way, this is the first time I have read the whole interview. I read just the first paragraph before, but it becomes more interesting as I read, and as I am provided with opportunity to discuss it:

If facism and the Nazi program are allowed to go through

Says this person who I am led to believe is an alien— I am afraid we shall see the most terrible war the world has ever had.

Who is going to involve us in the most terrible war the world has ever had? Such people as this lady who says "We must fight." And on making inquiry as to the person who used those three words, "We must fight," we learn that she comes from foreign shores, that she hates the government over there, and that she is willing to spill the blood of American children to satisfy her hatred. I ask Senators, is that American patriotism? I leave that for the American people to answer.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Thomas of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Who is this individual whom the Senator has quoted?

Mr. REYNOLDS. This individual who says we must fight I never knew; I never heard of her until I came on to the floor of the Senate and began to read this article. This Erika Mann is the daughter of a gentleman who came from Germany about a year ago, and from all the information I have here, is an alien, and she, the daughter of an alien, is telling us, as soon as she puts her foot upon our shores, that we have to fight, that she hates Hitler and Germany, and regardless of the deaths it will cause, and the sorrow, that we have to go to war.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. If the Senator will yield further, the purpose of my inquiry is to find out whether this person has some responsibility that should lead us to take serious notice of what she says.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I never heard of her before, but I have made inquiry, and I find that she is the daughter of a very eminent alien, who did not like Germany, and came to this country, and, not satisfied with their own country, the minute they get here they are trying to get us into war, just like the Communists who come here from Russia and all the other places in the world, and the minute we let them in, and the minute they become citizens, they try to overturn our form of government.

The time has arrived when the American people have to wake up, and if I can do anything to wake them up, I am going to do it. I do not know whether I can help much, but I am going to do my best.

She thinks that the pacifist attitude that prevented the Czechs from fighting for their country was the hinge that swung toward this week's happenings in Spain and an avalanche of worse days that may be ahead, especially for France.

She mentions France. Poor France. I feel sorry for France. France has a population of 42,000,000. I talked with the Minister of Education at the time when I talked to the Minister of War, and he told me that if the population of France continues to decrease for the next 50 years as it has been decreasing instead of increasing for the past several years, they would have a population about equal to that of Spain—24,000,000.

France has been destroyed from within. France depended upon Stalin and the Communists of Russia to stand by her as the result of their military alliance, and when the time came for the Soviet Union to act, France found that the Soviet Union and Stalin "ran out on her," told her they could not send any planes to France and that they could not fight.

Everyone knows—and our Ambassador to France will be bound to disclose if he is asked—that as a result of that military alliance hundreds of thousands of Communists slipped into France, and those Communists, those termites, have been destroying France from within, and Frenchmen today everywhere will state that what has dragged France down, and made her a second-class nation today, is that they let the Communists in.

Not only that, she came near getting into trouble by taking a hand in the difficulties in Spain. Senators will recall reading in the headlines that thousands of trucks loaded with supplies for the loyalist government went right across the line on the Spanish border. Those who have been there have seen the same thing. France had a fight last week over taking any further interest in the matter.

Let us get back to this person who has just come to the United States and says we have to go to war. I note that she mentions Germany. She refers to unrest in Germany. She says:

If they had let the Czechs go to war Germany would have been armed, there would have been a revolution long before now and Hitler would have been finished by this time. Oh, she hates Hitler. She wants the United States to go to war, she wants to arm and uniform the sons of American mothers just because she wants Hitler destroyed.

I am quite sure of that. He is the last man in the world who wants war, because he knows about the seething unrest and revolt throughout Germany. But until there are guns in their hands the people can do nothing.

Miss Mann said that sometimes it gives her a jolt to realize that she can talk and think in terms of aggression.

Think of it. We are criticizing all of the countries in the world for their aggression, and she says that she is glad that now she can think in terms of aggression, and that we should go to war. I read further:

I hardly recognize myself for the person I was a few years ago, when I was studying art and preparing to go on the stage. Events have altered me completely.

She said that recent stories coming out of Spain about the bravery of Loyalist women were no surprise to her.

REAL WORK FOR PACIFISTS

"What use is horror?" she asked. "Indulging in that sort of feeling is luxury for many people. Sometimes I think it must be very comfortable to be filled with horror and do nothing about it. Those of us who have been pacifists have real work to do. One cannot expect politicians—

To whom is she referring there? She must be talking about the Members of the Congress of the United States, because this body was created for the enactment of such neutrality laws as we now enjoy, and she did not hesitate to criticize and condemn the Government for its administration of the neutrality law.

One cannot expect politicians of any country to be humanitarians, though one did not expect them to be as stupid as some of them have turned out to be.

[Laughter ]

We are stupid, we are a lot of "dumbbells" for not putting the United States into war over in Europe against Hitler and Mussolini because she is mad with them. I do not know how she happened to come here. I expect she came here to try to get us into war.

There will be plenty to do, for it looks as though trouble for France is brewing. If more Americans had demanded that tanks and antiaircraft guns be sent to the Loyalists last year, Franco would not today be in Barcelona.

I am not going to enter into the question of the embargo over there.

All my life I shall remember the bright, brave spirit of Spanish women.

"We must fight," says this lady who has just reached the United States from foreign shores. She no sooner arrives here than she wants to get the United States involved in a war; but that she cannot do, because the American people will not stand for it, recognizing, as the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] stated a moment ago upon the floor of the Senate, that what takes place in Europe or in any other part of the world is none of the business of the people of the United States, and if we want to keep out of war we had better keep our skirts clear from difficulties in the other parts of the world.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first order of business on the calendar, pursuant to the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar under the agreement previously entered into, be postponed, and be the first order of business tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I concur in the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Thomas of Utah in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting a nomination in the Coast Guard, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

(For nomination this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under authority of the order of the Senate of the 28th ultimo, the following executive reports were submitted during adjournment of the Senate:

On January 30, 1939:

Mr. VAN NUYS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the following nominations:

Otto Kerner, of Illinois, to be a judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit; and William H. McDonnell, of Illinois, to be United States marshal for the northern district of Illinois.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Chester S. Dishong, of Florida, to be United States marshal for the southern district of Florida.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

Lonnie B. Ormes, of Tennessee, to be United States marshal for the middle district of Tennessee; and

Thomas D. Samford, of Alabama, to be United States attorney for the middle district of Alabama.

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Gaston Louis Porterie, of ported favorably the nomination of Gaston Louis Porterie, of Louisiana, to be United States district judge for the western district of Louisiana, to fill a position created by the act of Congress of May 31, 1938.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the following named sanitary engineers to be senior sanitary engineers in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from the dates set opposite their names:

Howard Norman Old, December 15, 1938; and Frank Russell Shaw, December 18, 1938.

On January 31, 1939:

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of William Baxter Lee, of Tennessee, to be United States district judge for the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee, to fill a position created by the act of Congress of May 31, 1938.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported favorably the nomination of Jewell W. Swofford, of Missouri, to be a member of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission for a term of 6 years from March 15, 1939. (Reappointment.)

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely, with a recommendation for rejection, the nomination of Floyd H. Roberts, of Virginia, now serving under a recess appointment, to be United States district judge for the western district of Virginia.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state in their order the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Otto Kerner, of Illinois, to be judge for the seventh circuit of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous support of this very able and competent man for the position of judge for the seventh circuit. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William Baxter Lee, of Tennessee, to be United States district judge for the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Gaston Louis Porterie, to be United States District Judge for the western district of Louisiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Thomas D. Samford to be United States attorney, middle district of Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Chester S. Dishong to be United States marshal, southern district of Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William H. Mc-Donnell to be United States marshal for the northern district of Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the nomination provides for the reappointment of one who has already rendered splendid service. I therefore move the confirmation of his nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Lonnie B. Ormes to be United States marshal for the middle district of Tennessee,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Howard Norman Old, to be senior sanitary engineer, United States Public Health Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Frank Russell Shaw to be senior sanitary engineer, United States Public Health Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, February 2, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate February 1, 1939

Lt. (J. G.) Quentin M. Greeley to be a lieutenant in the Coast Guard of the United States, to rank as such from July 1, 1937. (Lieutenant Greeley is now serving under temporary commission issued during the recess of the Senate.)

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 1, 1939

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS

Otto Kerner to be a judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES

William Baxter Lee to be United States district judge for the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee.

Gaston Louis Porterie to be United States district judge for the western district of Louisiana.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Thomas D. Samford to be United States attorney for the middle district of Alabama.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

Chester S. Dishong to be United States marshal for the southern district of Florida.

William H. McDonnell to be United States marshal for the northern district of Illinois.

Lonnie B. Ormes to be United States marshal for the middle district of Tennessee.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Howard Norman Old to be senior sanitary engineer. Frank Russell Shaw to be senior sanitary engineer.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou Ancient of Days, when the earth felt its first throb of life, it was touched to form by Thine infinite spirit. Thou didst gather it up and shape it into unjarring harmonies. O help us to live in the revealing glory of the Light of the World. O bread of life, come to the souls of men, lift us high to the still place where we may know of Thine unsearchable riches. Enable us to think true thoughts and speak true words. A pure thought breathed into the blossom of a pure word is an inspiration to good and upright living. Almighty God, allow not the air of uncertainty to tremble before our gaze. May we discern clarity, intention, and purpose in the trend of things. O make bare Thine arms. Fold them about our President, our Speaker, and the Congress; and may they declare that greatness which makes men great. In the name of our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to include therein a speech made by Secretary of the Interior Ickes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. Voorhis of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Record.

WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, from the Committee on Appropriations, filed a conference report and statement on House Joint Resolution 83, making appropriation for work relief and relief for printing under the rule.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. White of Idaho asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

IDAHO HIGHWAY TO YELLOWSTONE PARK

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, the grandeur of the western mountains and the scenic beauty of the national parks attract thousands of visitors and tourists to our Western States annually. Particular interest is manifested in the Yellowstone National Park, and many travelers journeying to the southwest and desirous of seeing America first include the Yellowstone Park in their itinerary. After touring the park many seek a direct route from the Yellowstone to Salt Lake and the southwest through the beautiful valleys and wonderful mountain ranges of southeastern Idaho only to meet with disappointment when they find that there is no gateway from the Yellowstone into the adjoining State of Idaho.

Mr. Speaker, the State of Idaho to provide accommodations for this travel, has in good faith and in accord with an understanding reached with the National Park Service, constructed a link in the State highway system through the Bechler Basin to the park boundary at Cave Falls, to connect with a short link in the park highway system to be constructed by the Park Service between Cave Falls and the Old Faithful Inn which will provide a direct route through the wonderful Saw Tooth Mountain ranges in Idaho to Salt Lake and California.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of convenience to the vacationists and travelers to the southwest passing through the Yellowstone Park and to encourage visitors to our national parks and trips through the matchless mountain sections of Idaho, the people of our State in support of a plan to establish a gateway between the national park and the construction of a link to connect the Yellowstone loop highway with the Idaho State highway system, have joined, speaking through the house and senate of the Idaho State Legislature in a joint memorial to Congress to "urge the passage of such legislation and that Congress make the necessary appropriations to provide for and to carry to completion the construction of the road" mentioned within the boundaries of the Yellowstone Park.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the memorial herewith presented by the State Legislature of Idaho may be printed in the Congressional Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

House Joint Memorial 1

Joint memorial to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that

Whereas the Yellowstone National Park is bounded by three intermountain States, namely, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming, with three entrances from Montana, two from Wyoming, and none from Idaho; by reason of the reputation and popularity of the said Yellowstone National Park as a national playground, thousands of people from the Nation and the world visit said park each year, and as a result thereof great publicity of a beneficial nature and of great value accrues to these two States, namely, Montana and Wyoming, and the gateway communities of said States; that

Whereas due to said travel the greatly increasing traffic in said national park is producing and will continue to produce, unless relieved, great traffic congestion at said entrances and in the so-called Bottle Neck at Old Faithful in said park; and called Bottle Neck at Old Faithful in said park; and

Whereas there now exists a State highway in the State of Idaho for an Idaho entrance via the Bechler Ranger Station and Bechler River to the Yellowstone National Park line which would require an additional construction of highway by the Government of approximately 22 miles to extend such highway to the Yellowstone Loop Highway at Old Faithful and produce an Idaho entrance which would relieve said point and its traffic congestion and open up a highly scenic area within the said Yellowstone National Park not now accessible to the motorist, and would provide great additional benefits to the State of Idaho and to communities along said entrance: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Idaho
(the senate concurring), That we most respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States that the said Congress favorably consider such legislation and passage and make such necessary appro-

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Idaho (the senate concurring), That we most respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States that the said Congress favorably consider such legislation and passage and make such necessary appropriations to provide for and carry to completion the highway above mentioned from the Yellowstone Park line to the Loop Highway of said Yellowstone National Park at Old Faithful, and that the National Park Service of the Department of Interior of the United States be authorized to begin immediately on the construction of said highway; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho be authorized, and he is hereby directed, to immediately forward certified copies of this joint memorial to the Secretary of the Interior, to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute in order that I may ask the gentleman from Virginia a question.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman from Virginia inform the House when it is purposed to bring up for consideration the conference report on the relief bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is the purpose to call it up the first thing tomorrow.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to insert therein a copy of a letter I wrote to Mr. Donald Wakefield Smith, member of the National Labor Relations Board, and his reply to my letter, notwithstanding the estimate of the Public Printer that it will make three pages of the Congressional Record at an estimated cost of $135.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the need for a permanent Public Works Administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRANT of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to include therein an address on the life and character of Robert Edward Lee delivered by Mrs. L. M. Bashinsky, past president general of the United Daughters of the Confederacy at the State Teachers College in Troy, Ala., January 19, 1939.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to include therein an article from the American Teacher.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to include therein a letter I received in opposition to Senate Resolution No. 24, introduced by Senator Nye.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. SATTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House for the remainder of the week in consideration of House Resolution 67.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are the minority members agreeable to this request?

Mr. SATTERFIELD. Yes; I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I am sure they are.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And the request is for this week only?

Mr. SATTERFIELD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include an address of the Honorable Albert W. Hawks to the Congress of American Industry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Hartley]?

There was no objection.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEE ON THE CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 76

Resolved, That JOHN C. KUNKEL, of Pennsylvania, be, and he is hereby, elected to the Committee on the Civil Service of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Alexander]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of this Congress to the fact that yesterday, January 31, 1939, the Netherlands Trade Agreement with the United States expired.

I wish also to suggest to the proper committee of the House that they immediately take steps to investigate this agreement with the idea of canceling same or of so reducing its effect by tariff imposition as to prevent the further dumping here of sago and tapioca starch, which, in 1937, amounted to the enormous sum of 466,327,683 pounds, or nearly 40 percent of this country's total starch consumption.

This means direct and destructive competition with Maine, New York, Minnesota, Montana, and Idaho potatoes; competition with Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, and Minnesota corn; with our wheat; and our Southland's rice; and a continual reduction or depression of farm prices in general because we cannot hope to compete with this duty-free, cheap, tropical-labor production and retain our high standard of living or civilization.

No doubt you appreciate the fact that a fair proportion of several important agricultural crops are converted into starch, either for sale as such or as derivatives of starch, such as sirup and sugars. In the case of corn about one-third of all the corn grain shipped to the primary markets is converted into cornstarch, or into one of a multitude of its derivatives. In short crop years the proportion is even greater. The corn-refining industry consists of 14 plants, which have processed in recent years from 58,000,000 bushels in 1935 to 87,000,000 bushels-in 1926 and also 1929-of shelled corn annually. Over 68,000,00 bushels were processed in 1937. The corn-refining industry in recent years has paid the United States farmers more money annually than they have received from any one of 68 different crops, and there are only 78 important crops. This industry paid out more money for corn in either 1936 or 1937 than the farmers received from the sale of their corn grain in 46 out of the 48 States.

The United States potato-starch industry is large in Maine, where from 1,000,000 to 5,000,000 bushels of potatoes have been processed annually since 1927–28. Some potato starch is produced in Minnesota. About 15,000,000 pounds of wheat starch and approximately 1,000,000 pounds of rice starch are produced annually.

These industries are primarily American, using domestic labor, capital, and equipment. The corn-refining industry is a heavy-goods industry. The United States starch industries are liberal consumers of goods and services of other industries. Extensive use is made of paper and cotton bags. Chemicals and coal are an important item. The transportation of, first, the raw agricultural products to the plants and the accumulation of supplies, and then the shipment of the starches, their derivatives, and the byproducts to consuming centers are reasonably important sources of revenue to the railroads.

A severe competitive situation exists in the starch industry. Every starch-producing product, every kind of starch, and every product competing with any starch is subject to a tariff, except tapioca and sago, two tropical starches which enter the United States free of duty. According to the Tariff Act of 1930, all starches are subject to an import duty. However, the Tariff Act of 1930 classifies tapioca and sago as "flour," although in various publications the Tariff Commission and the Department of Agriculture refer to them as starches. In addition they have been bound to the free list by the Netherlands Trade Agreement.

In binding tapioca and sago to the free list, through the medium of the Netherlands Trade Agreement, the Department of State caused United States agriculture, particularly the Potato, Rice, Wheat, and Corn Belt farmers, to lose an important outlet for cash crops. To date the only manner by which the Department of State will permit agriculture to meet the competition from the duty-free starches is on a price basis. To effectively compete with the imported starches, corn as a raw material for cornstarch production would have to decline below the current level of prices, which, from the Corn Belt farmers' standpoint, is generally considered unsatisfactory to the maintenance of a reasonable income and standard of living.

The current drop in the imports of tapioca and sago does not mean that the American starch interests will no longer be affected by the imports of the duty-free starches. From 1900 to date the imports have increased at an average rate of 6 percent per year, or have increased 100 percent every 12 years. The rate of increase is materially greater than that of those industries which require starch as a raw material. Obviously, the United States starch market is being taken over by foreign interests. It means a decreasing market exists for those United States farm products which may be used for starch production.

Why do these imports exist? There are many reasons. The most important one is that tapioca and sago are free of any import duty; in addition, they are bound to the free list by the Netherlands Trade Agreement. The cost of producing tapioca or sago is much less than that of corn or cornstarch. The tropical starches far outyield corn in the amount of starch produced per acre of raw material; their labor is exceedingly cheap-25 cents per day; capital equipment is crude and limited, and the hot tropical sun is extensively substituted for coal. These tropical starches are, therefore, in a better competitive position than cornstarch. The corn-loan plan of the Agriculture Adjustment Act of 1938, and the Government's efforts to raise prices, and its sympathy toward higher prices of other items which form a large proportion of the total cost of starch have limited the domestic starch manufacturers' efforts to effectively compete with the imported starches on a price basis but with what a cost in the taxpayers' hard-earned money!

Attached are a number of tables and charts. There is a tabulation and a chart of the imports over a period of years. The proportion of the domestic starch market taken over by tapioca and sago is depicted in a table and chart. There is also an illustration of the relationship between the prices of cornstarch and tapioca and the duty-free imports. When tapioca is relatively expensive, the imports are small; when it is relatively cheap, as it has been for many years, the imports are large. The same price story applies in large part of potato starch.

THE PROBLEM OF CULL POTATOES IN MINNESOTA

A few years ago Minnesota supported a potato starch and flour industry. There were 17 plants for the manufacture of high-grade potato starch and flour that helped the farmers by returning to them some profit on the small or defective potatoes that were graded out to maintain the size and quality required for table stock. Only one plant, at Dalbo, is now in operation. Plants at Cambridge and Princeton are still usable but have not operated for several years. The plant at Dalbo still has unsold its last year's production of 100 tons of fine food quality starch. Close grading, if again established, will again yield a sufficient quantity of low-grade stock to reestablish this industry and give employment to Minnesota labor.

The potato-starch industry in Maine operated 23 plants with aid from the Government to farmers for diverting po-Idaho operated 4 factories for their cull stock. Starch and potato flour were sold to the Surplus Commodities Corporation and given to the Relief Administration for distribution. One hundred and seventy-five thousand pounds were shipped into Minnesota to relief clients and the flour was well liked. It is used for gravies, fish balls, frying, potato bread, and it makes good mashed potato. This competed with the Minnesota plant at Dalbo, that received no governmental support.

The United States is the only country that produces starch that does not protect its producers by an import tax. In the Netherlands Trade Agreement which expired vesterday starch from the Netherlands Indies is allowed to enter the United States free of duty. The Netherlands homeland itself protects its own potato-starch industry by an import tax on sago and tapioca flour from its own colonies.

This agreement must not be renewed, and a protective import tax must be levied on starches, at least those of food grade, to protect our corn, rice, wheat, and potato industries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include an address I delivered at the McKinley Day banquet, Dayton, Ohio, on Monday evening of this week, January 30.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROUTZOHN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes today at the conclusion of the special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered by the Honorable Lyle H. Boren, a Member of this body, in Washington.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

GRADING AND CLASSIFICATION OF CLERKS IN THE FOREIGN SERVICE (H. DOC. NO. 146)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State and the accompanying draft of proposed legislation to amend the act entitled "An act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor," approved February 23, 1931.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 1, 1939.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 60 and ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 60

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Government Organiza-Resolved, That the Select Committee on Government Organization is authorized to continue its work begun under authority of House Resolution 60 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, as amended by House Resolution 106, Seventy-fifth Congress, and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power, authority, and jurisdiction as that conferred upon it by said House Resolution 60 and House Resolution 106 of the Seventy-fifth Congress: Provided, however, That any bills or resolutions reported by said committee shall have a privileged status and all points of order against said bills or resolutions shall be considered as waived.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out the last two words in line 9, all of line 10 and the word "waived" in line 11 and insert the following: "It shall be in order to consider any such bills or resolutions so reported without the intervention of any point of order as provided in clause 4 of rule XXI."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes | desire any time?

Mr. MAPES. Yes. Mr. SABATH. I yield the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution re-creates a committee that was created in the Seventy-fifth Congress. I feel that there is no opposition to the resolution. It gives the Speaker the privilege of reappointing this committee to continue its efforts on behalf of legislation having to do with the reorganization of the various bureaus and departments in order to bring about economy and efficiency in the Government. I am informed that one or two objections to the bill that came up for consideration during the last Congress have been eliminated and that the recommendations that this committee will make will meet with the general approval of the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Are we to assume from the gentleman's observation that the committee, before its appointment, has agreed upon a measure to be reported to the House?

Mr. SABATH. I may say to the gentleman that I have been informed by the gentlemen who have been examining and investigating this problem that they feel they have perfected a bill by which they have succeeded in eliminating objectionable features that appeared in the bill reported during the last Congress.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has the bill been introduced?

Mr. SABATH. I do not know whether the bill has been introduced or not, but these gentlemen have worked diligently upon a bill and upon the legislation. This bill, as I understand it, was not prepared or written by anyone but members of the House committee; so the objections that have heretofore been made that the legislation has been prepared somewhere else and just given to the Members of the House to introduce are not true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. WADSWORTH. Perhaps the gentleman is not authorized to make the statement, and if the question is unfair I shall not, of course, press it. Does the gentleman understand that the committee is to be appointed de novo?

Mr. SABATH. I am not in position to state, but I believe it would be a prudent thing to reappoint most of the members of this committee, who have given a great deal of thought and study to the problem. I presume the gentleman from New York, if he had the power to appoint a committee, would appoint efficient, experienced Members who have given a great deal of time and thought to the problem.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the gentleman believe, if this committee is to be appointed, and I presume it would include most of the old membership, that the committee should commence de novo and allow hearings?

Mr. SABATH. I presume the committee will comply with any reasonable request. So far we have not heard any complaints against the committee refusing to hear any Members or anyone on the subject. That is my understand-

Mr. WADSWORTH. There were no public hearings last year at all. The proceedings were held behind closed doors and not even the Membership of this House knew what was going on.

Mr. SABATH. Then I stand corrected if such is the case. Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. TABER. Before the bill was brought in I made a motion in the committee that hearings be held openly on the bill and that it be considered before the committee. There were not even any hearings before the committee.

Mr. SABATH. I may say to the gentleman that I myself have always believed that committees should give a fair hearing to any Member or anyone else who has anything of value to present. However, I believe to hold hearings merely for the purpose of delaying important legislation is manifestly unfair.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Massa-

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman says they have already framed a bill which will be reported. Does the gentleman mean this committee is not going to study the problem at all?

Mr. SABATH. No. I did not say "framed." I did not use that word. I say they have been working on the question.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Who is "they"?

Mr. SABATH. The members of the former committee, in whom I know the gentleman from Massachusetts has implicit confidence.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Have the minority members of the committee been working with them?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. If I correctly understand the position of the gentleman, it is that he has confidence that in the event this resolution is adopted the Speaker in the selection of this committee will appoint men of discretion and good judgment. and that the committee will go about the study of the question in such a manner as the committee believes will elicit the necessary information and will report to the House a bill it believes expressive of the interests of the country and the will of the House.

The gentleman has referred to a committee. As I understand the position of the gentleman, it is that the gentleman has the impression that there are Members of the House who have been giving a great deal of study to this question and have formed pretty definite ideas as to what the bill should contain, and that the bill which will be reported, if a bill is reported covering such new proposal as may grow out of the study that has been conducted and, of course, the study that will be conducted, whether or not it be de novoand the gentleman, of course, is willing to leave that to the discretion and the good judgment of the committee that is set up-will not include provisions which the other bill carried and out of which grew a good deal of controversy in

As I understand, the gentleman further has the impression that there will be no effort at piecemeal legislation, and that if any reorganization bill be considered it will be one bill reported by a committee the Speaker will appoint if the pending resolution is adopted.

Am I correctly interpreting the views of the gentleman? Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is correct. I have confidence that the Speaker will make the proper selections in appointing the members of the committee. I do not know if it is the intent of the committee to bring in one bill or two or three bills. The committee, naturally, will use its judgment on that question.

Mr. COX. Of course, the committee that is set up must be given some latitude; the gentleman recognizes that.

Mr. SABATH. Why, of course.

Mr. COX. The gentleman does not know, of course, whom the Speaker will appoint, but the gentleman naturally has the right to assume the Speaker will draw on the experience gained during the past session.

Mr. SABATH. The resolution reads as follows:

That the Select Committee on Government Organization is authorized to continue its work begun under authority of House Resolution 60 of the Seventy-fifth Congress.

Naturally, that would presuppose that the Speaker would appoint the former members of that committee, who have given splendid service.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is proof of the saying that "hope springs eternal in the human breast." Ever since I have been in Congress there has been talk of the reorganization of the executive departments of the Government. Everyone admits they ought to be reorganized. The problem is to present a reorganization plan that will be acceptable.

As far as I am able to speak for the minority members of the Committee on Rules, they do not oppose this resolution, although there is one provision in it they would like to see changed. They feel there is work to be done by a committee such as this resolution proposes to continue in existence and they are hopeful this committee will be able to present to the House a reorganization bill that may be adopted. With that in view they favor the passage of this resolution.

Personally, I offered in the Committee on Rules an amendment to strike out the proviso which gives any legislation the committee may report a privileged status. I believe the committee should come before the Committee on Rules and ask for a rule to make in order the consideration of any bill the committee may report, the same as the standing committees of the House. However, the majority of the committee did not see fit to adopt that amendment.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to my friend the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I believe it fair to the gentleman that the fact be developed that out of the proposal the gentleman offered grew the amendment the committee adopted, which it is proposed to offer in the consideration of the resolution. The gentleman will also concede, I believe, that that amendment, if adopted, will produce much the same results as if the gentleman's original amendment had been accepted.

Mr. MAPES. I may say to the gentleman that if the proposed legislation reported by the committee is to be given a privileged status, I see no objection to the amendment made by the committee. In fact, I think it ought to be adopted. For the benefit of those who have not studied the rules, that amendment is to make it possible for the committee to report legislation transferring bureaus or agencies from one department to another, and continuing the appropriation that has been made for such bureaus in the new department.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will yield further, I may say the gentleman appreciates the fact that if this study is to be conducted, and if this committee, if set up, is to report a bill. the right to do the things provided for by the amendment to which the gentleman has referred is absolutely necessary.

Mr. MAPES. Yes; I believe that is a fair statement. If the legislation is adopted, of course, some such provision as that ought to be carried in it. The point I am making is that the entire matter ought to come before the Committee on Rules and a rule should be secured before the matter is brought up on the floor after the committee makes its report. In fairness, too, I perhaps should say that the resolution creating the committee in the last Congress did contain a similar provision, giving any bill reported by the committee a privileged status.

Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RICH.

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. The committee in making its report will have the right to suggest changes in one department or another and it will also have the right to delegate such power to the President of the United States, will it not?

Mr. MAPES. Of course, that will be a matter that the House itself will have to pass upon and determine eventually. What the committee will report, of course, I have no way of

Mr. RICH. And any report that is made by the committee delegating power necessarily will be acted upon by the House before it becomes law.

Mr. MAPES. It will have to come before the House and be considered and debated and passed upon in the same way as any other legislation.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I only intended to take a couple of minutes and I do not want to take too much time, but I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York

Mr. TABER. The trouble with the resolution, as I see it, is that clause 4 of rule XXI prohibits the bringing in of appropriations in any resolution or bill from any committee other than the Committee on Appropriations. It will be impossible under this resolution, if the amendment is adopted, for us to prevent this special committee bringing in new appropriations or anything else of that sort, and it will also be impossible for us to prevent the committee from giving power to the President to transfer appropriations for purposes other than those for which they were intended when the appropriations were made by the Congress. I think this is a very serious thing.

Mr. MAPES. I think, perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I should say that I have faith enough in my fellow men to think that the Committee on Reorganization will not attempt to bring in any new appropriations. My understanding is that the purpose of this provision is simply to make it possible for the committee to transfer agencies from one department to another and to continue the appropriation which has already been made, and not to attempt to suggest new appropriations.

Some of us have given thought and consideration to this matter of reorganization for a great many years, and, for one, I repeat what I said at the beginning, that I hope the committee this year will be able to bring in a report which will meet with the approval of a majority of the House.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker, and yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Rules Committee [Mr. Sabath] in his statement just now to the House, said he did not think there was any necessity for holding extensive public hearings on a reorganization bill because this might delay the consideration of such an important measure.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FISH. I certainly do yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. The chairman of the Rules Committee did not state any such thing. The chairman said he believes in granting fair hearings to all those who have anything of substance to present, but that he did not believe in holding hearings simply for the purpose of delaying legislation.

Mr. FISH. Is it not a fact that there were no public hearings in the last Congress on the reorganization bill? I understood the gentleman to say that public hearings might delay the consideration of this alleged vital and important measure.

I would like to point out to the House that by the adoption of the pending resolution that we will empower a select committee to consider the reorganization problem that has been before the Congress for 150 years. I cannot exactly understand how any public hearings will greatly delay the consideration of another reorganization bill.

Mr. SABATH. Does not the gentleman think that 150 years is time enough to consider the measure?

Mr. FISH. I am perfectly willing to wait another 150 years, and I think it may be advisable to wait longer than that if you have any idea of bringing into the House the same kind of reorganization bill that you did in the last Congress, which was an abomination of desolation and which was thrown out of the House by the vote of many Members on the majority side itself. I presume now, however, like the King of France, the Democratic majority will march up the hill on the reorganization bill and discard almost everything they had in the bill last year and march down again with a new measure. This is the reason, I assume, the minority is not opposing this resolution, although I believe they should oppose that part of the resolution which provides a privileged status.

I see no reason for this Select Committee on Government Organization having a privileged status. The only committees in the House that have such status are the Ways and Means and on general appropriations the Appropriations Committee and the Committee on Accounts. As a general proposition there are very few precedents for giving any special or select committee a privileged status to bring in legislation. There is no opportunity, under the rules, for me to offer an amendment to strike out the last four lines of the pending resolution which would do away with this privileged status except to vote down the previous question. I submit that unless this committee agrees to have public hearings, it is an absurdity to give them a privileged status to bring in such legislation without public hearings and then present it to the House when the House itself would be utterly ignorant of what the bill was based on and would be unable to have the benefit of any public hearings on the bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FISH. I have limited time, but I yield for a brief question.

Mr. COX. The gentleman referred to the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Rules, and the chairman of that committee undertook to correct what the gentleman from New York said. If I understand the position of the chairman of the Committee on Rules, if I understood what he said, it is that as far as he knows no cut-and-dried procedure will be laid out to be followed by any committee that will be set up. The gentleman speaks of a working committee, He says that whatever committee is set up ought to conduct public hearings. That committee does not now exist, and, of course, we have no way of foretelling who will be placed on that committee. Therefore we cannot well disclose what procedure they will follow.

Mr. FISH. I think the gentleman and myself are in accord, and I believe the chairman of the Committee on Rules is with us in that we want public hearings on the reorganization bill, but we want some assurance now that there will be public hearings.

Mr. COX. Is not the gentleman willing to rest upon his rights to prevail upon the committee which will be set up to have public hearings? The gentleman does not want the House now to seek to tie the hands of the committee or a committee that has not yet been brought into existence?

Mr. FISH. No; but I would like to have assurance from some member of that committee that there will be public hearings on this so-called important legislation.

This is a continuation of the old committee, as I understand it, or at least the same members will be on it.

Mr. COX. This will be a new committee, as I understand the resolution.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes that I have remaining I want to explain to the new Members of the House that the reorganization bill that came before the last Congress had many items in it that were never included in any reorganization bill before. The Republicans are not opposed to efficiency in Government, or to the reorganization of the different bureaus of the Government. Republican Presidents have made that recommendation in the past, in the interest of good government. We opposed the last bill because it included control of the Civil Service, the Comptroller General's Office, and welfare funds. Why are we pushing this legislation at the present time? We have been in session for 1 month, and the Congress has not done one thing to restore confidence and recovery or to put any of the 12,000,000 American people back to work.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FISH. I challenge anyone to show any demand for this legislation or who is asking for the legislation. Are the farm groups, is the American Federation of Labor, are the businessmen of the country asking for consideration of a new reorganization bill at this time? I do not believe any Republican on this side has had a single letter asking him to support the reorganization bill, and I doubt if any such demand has been received even by the Democrats.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. For just a question.

Mr. WARREN. When the gentleman says that nothing has been done, I call attention to the fact that the Republican Party in this House has delayed the organization of the House, and quite naturally so, because they did not have their committee assignments ready for election until just last week.

Mr. FISH. I do not think that is a fair or accurate statement.

I yield to the minority leader.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I want to state that the Democrats had their committee assignments ready only 2 days previous to the announcement of our committee appointments.

Mr. FISH. I think that is an unquestioned fact.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, entirely apart from the question of whether any particular groups about the country have been demanding legislation, is not the gentleman prepared to concede and does he not contend that there is need for reorganization?

Mr. FISH. I concede that, and I think the Republicans do. They are in favor of economy and efficiency in government; and if this committee brings in a proper bill, we will support it; but they have not done it in the past, and it is almost too much to hope they will do anything different in the future.

Mr. COX. Then the gentleman concedes that there is need for legislation along this line?

Mr. FISH. For proper legislation, yes; but if this new reorganization bill gives more power to the President, I shall oppose it. I think the time has come to take back some of the powers that we have already given to the President, and restore representative government in the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COX. The gentleman of course concedes that whatever committee is set up will perform as the servants of the House, and without regard to any report they may make, it will be in the determination of the House as to what should be done.

Mr. FISH. I say to the gentleman that I can only judge what will happen from what has happened in the past, and we know what happened to the chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. O'Connor] in the last Congress, who opposed the reorganization bill. He was "purged" by his own party leader. I have little faith in any reorganization bill that emanates from the present administration. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, the only thing the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] failed to tell the House and what he always says is that he comes from the home district of the President of the United States, upon whom he has been venting his wrath and spleen for the last 6 years, in and out of this body.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] raised no question 2 years ago about the setting up of this committee or its privileged status. This committee was created by the unanimous vote of the House 2 years ago, with very little debate and with no roll call. It is now a late day for even our friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes] to come in and say that this committee should have no privileged status, because without that privileged status there is no use of even setting it up.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth], are the two best exhibits we have in the House as to why this committee should be vested with a privileged status. Back in 1920, under the administration of Woodrow Wilson, with the Republican Party in control of both branches of the Government, a reorganization committee was set up. It was an able and distinguished committee. Serving on that committee was the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Mapes, the former Representative from Pennsylvania, Dr. Temple; and the former Representative from Virginia, Hon. R. Walton Moore. Serving on the Senate committee were Senator Smoot; Senator Wadsworth, of New York; and Senator Harrison of Mississippi. During three Congresses that committee met, trying to formulate legislation, and in the Sixty-eighth Congress the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES) brought into this House a well considered and a well prepared bill, meeting the situation as it existed at that time. What then confronted him? He found that through some oversight that committee had not been given a privileged status, and their labors were all in vain, and they never could get it to the floor of the House.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr.. MAPES. Just to keep the record straight, the report came up in a short session of the Congress. It was the joint action of the House and Senate. The Senate members of the joint committee attempted to bring the bill up in the Senate and were defeated in that attempt. The House organization, including at that time Speaker Gillette and Majority Leader Longworth, had consented to have the matter brought up in the House until that action in the Senate; but after the action in the Senate, of course, it would have been futile in the short session to have brought it up in the House.

Mr. WARREN. The fact is that the bill was never considered in the House of Representatives.

Now, answering the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], about the amendment to this resolution waiving a point of order, in the act of 1932, in which the Congress gave the then President Hoover the right to reorganize the Government, the most far-reaching act of this kind ever delegated to any President of the United States, an act that gave Mr. Hoover the right to absolutely destroy and change and wipe out and turn into a mere shell not only bureaus but independent departments, departments headed by a Cabinet officer, all of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] voted for, there was contained a provision that the President, in shifting those bureaus and agencies, should have the right to also shift the personnel and to transfer the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made. That is the only reason in the world why the amendment is offered to waive a point of order-not to appropriate money, but in case a consolidation or reorganization is made among several bureaus, to merely transfer the funds that have already been appropriated by the Congress, in order not to keep a new bureau suspended in the air and without operation.

I here and now assure the gentleman from New York that that is the sole and only purpose of this amendment.

Now, in answer to some questions which the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] asked the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath], it is probably out of place at this time for me to say this: In the first place, it is with some diffidence that I discuss this matter, because I happen to be on the committee; and if I had my own likes to satisfy, I assure the House I would like to get off of it today. It is nothing in the world but a headache and much work for me. Acting solely on my own initiative, for the last month I have been preparing a bill. I have now finished the drafting of that bill. After the gentleman from Missouri, the distinguished chairman of this committee [Mr. Cochran], sees that measure, if he approves it, certainly he is entitled to introduce it, because I have no pride of authorship whatever. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] knows more about the inner workings of the departments of the Government than any other man in either branch of the Congress.

I believe that the bill which I have prepared will be a common meeting ground for Members on both sides of the aisle to approach this problem. I realize that when we had this fierce debate last year, men honestly differed about some of the things contained in the measure, although I must call attention to the fact that on August 17, 1937, the House of Representatives, by a vote of 283 to 75, passed the major part of this program, amounting to approximately 80 percent of it, by a nonpartisan vote. The distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes] voted for it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cole] voted for it. So did Messrs. Andrews, Burdick, Case, Englebright, Halleck, Reece of Tennessee, Stefan, and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Wolverton].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly I yield, and am very glad to acknowledge the splendid speech made at that time by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. To keep the record straight again, the bill, of course, as it passed the House did not contain the provision abolishing the Civil Service Commission or the General Accounting Office.

Mr. WARREN. I made that clear. The gentleman is entirely correct. If the gentleman will have just a little patience I believe that after this committee is reconstituted—and I honestly believe it—we can bring in here a measure that will meet the accord of the majority of the Members of the House. I, therefore, hope, Mr. Speaker, that when the previous question is moved on this resolution we will vote for the previous question and the adoption of the resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the re-creation of the Committee on Government Organization. The thing to which I object in this resolution is that it carries a provision, in an amendment the committee has reported, that it shall be in order to consider any such bills or resolutions so reported without the intervention of any point of order as provided in clause 4 of rule XXI. Clause 4 of rule XXI prohibits any bill or joint resolution carrying appropriations coming from any committee not having jurisdiction to report appropriations. This provision would give this committee power to set up new organizations and provide appropriations for them without consideration by the Committee on Appropriations. It would give it authority to delegate to the President power to transfer those appropriations.

In my opinion, if we are going to pass any reorganization till it should, in the first place, provide for the reorganization directly. In the second place, I believe that no bill should authorize the President to transfer appropriations. If the House should see fit-and I think they will not-to give the President power to perform reorganizations, the power to appropriate for the new set-up should be given to the deficiency committee of the Appropriations Committee. The Congress has never failed to provide funds for any organization needing them and it would not in this instance. There would be a check and an opportunity for the new organization set-up to justify what it needed. Instead of having the funds provided by an Executive order it is my thought that the Congress should preserve its control over the money. The only way it can do this is to vote down the previous question and refuse to adopt such an amendment as the committee has brought in, the amendment waiving points of order under clause 4 of rule XXI on resolutions brought in by this reorganization committee. I hope the previous question will be voted down so that the amendment may be considered by the House and then I shall ask that this be done when we reach the appropriate stage in consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Martin].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] referred to the reorganization bill, killed in the last Congress, as an abomination of legislation. The day after the defeat of that bill I procured a copy of the New York Times, reputed to be the greatest newspaper in the world and certainly not a New Deal organ, to see what it had to say about the action of the House.

The New York Times said editorially that the reorganization bill was a good bill, but it had been defeated because Congress did not feel like turning over such powers to a "dictator." I am not able to add that up. At any rate, it praised the bill.

So far as the committee that handled that bill is concerned I may say that the bill was most ably presented and defended. In 10 years in Congress I have never seen a bill more ably managed. Read the debates on that bill in the last Congress. The bill was handled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Vinson], and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran]. Read those debates and you will agree with me that it was defended, explained, and justified in masterly fashion. Every attack on it failed.

After the action of the House on that occasion, senselessly stampeded into killing a good bill framed by its own Members, I said that if I were President of the United States I would throw the reorganization of the Government into the lap of the Congress and then I would just come up here, get a ringside seat, and laugh myself to death. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is a delicate subject for me to talk about, inasmuch as I was a member of the committee. What was the procedure? Secret sessions for months, the public not allowed to know of the extraordinary demands made. In the minds of the public there arose a great fear lest extraordinary powers be granted the President in view of most extraordinary demands immediately preceding. The thought of granting those powers to the Executive caused the Nation to make such expostulations that even with a minority of only 80 on the Republican side, aided by the conscience of the majority, the bill was defeated.

The new Members will be told that we gave similar extraordinary powers to Mr. Hoover. We did give him extraordinary powers of recommendation only. I suggest that you read the recommendations he made in December 1932. Certainly none of his recommendations were extraordinary, but the Democrats were in the majority. They had the power to set aside anything Mr. Hoover might recommend; and they quickly, without much apparent consideration, threw all his recommendations aside, notwithstanding they were carefully thought out and reasonable recommendations.

The thought I want to express is that last year this was a joint committee, and another branch had equal authority. Members of the majority in the House have taken the floor this morning to say that they have thought out a measure that will probably be satisfactory, but I ask: How about the measures being thought out by Members of another body, measures which are promised will have in them some measure of economy?

May I say to the new Members that there were 18 on this committee, and there were only 4 of the minority selected. Yet when it came up in that spectacular debate last year the cry of the leaders on the other side was, "Look out for the Republicans; they will get you if you don't look out." Now we have 160 Members on this side, and I think we can be more persuasive than before. But I for one hope that no matter what recommendation comes from the President, it will be brought here for our acceptance before he can proceed to make changes. Transferring particular departments of the Government and at the same time changing their names enables the President to get rid of those whom he does not like. The heads would roll. I have seen such reorganizations in my own State.

There are many features of the bill that were presented last year that will probably not again be presented. I imagine we will have a mild, noncontroversial bill presented to the House. But what will come from another body and later acted upon in conference we do not know. I hope that we may have public hearings, that all may understand the changes contemplated. If I happen to be appointed to that committee, I do not wish my tongue to be tied so that my public could not know fully the powers granted to the Executive.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is not protesting the adoption of the pending resolution, is he?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, no; simply an expression of doubt. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, may I address myself particularly to my colleagues on this side of the aisle who were not in this body in January 1937, when the President, on the 12th day of that month, sent us a message dealing with reorganization? That is a little more than 2 years ago. Two days later, on January 14, 1937, there came before this body for consideration Resolution No. 60, and I think we went along pretty well and in good faith on all this without scarcely anticipating what was going to happen.

After the appointment of that committee and sessions behind closed doors they came in with the celebrated reorganization bill. There was a great deal of language contained therein about transferring and retransferring functions and agencies, about grouping and regrouping functions, about abolishing agencies, with some exceptions; and when the bill came upon the floor for consideration, that is when the fight began. Our colleagues over on this side were instrumental in large part in finally putting an end to that which appealed to the country as a whole as a kind of abomination. You can then understand the skittishness that now prevails. You can understand the certain sense of delicacy that persists in this House today. It is because we had our fingers burned once before. That is the answer to the gentleman from North Carolina.

I suppose it will be all right to go along with the present Resolution No. 60, but do not forget it is a continuation of Resolution No. 60 of January 14, 1937, which considered all matters embraced in the message of the President of the United States on reorganization. It may be an innocuous bill, but mark well the observation made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, when the bill goes over to the other side of the Capitol and falls into the hands of the Senate: What will the Members of that body do? What will the conference report be like when it comes back to this body? Suppose it comes back in the last hectic days of the session, when we are here until late at night and there is so little deliberation on vital and important matters. That is the reason we are skittish today and that is why I favor, as does the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], the elimination from this bill of language which provides for the transfer of appropriations.

It is our last crack at this thing if they do not do a good job and it is engrossed upon the law books. Let us not barter away that little power. Let us vote down the previous question and see whether it cannot be amended so that we may still hold on to the money bags and have a fighting chance for our "white alley" when the time comes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I cannot see the wisdom of discussing what a committee which has not even been created is going to do. The committee is not at the present time in existence. This resolution provides for re-creating the select committee.

I want to use my time to answer a few statements that have been made. First, may I say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen] that this committee is not going to appropriate any money nor can it under the language referred to by them. There is no authority there to appropriate money. It simply provides that when the President takes one bureau and transfers it to, or consolidates it with another, along with that bureau goes the money that the Appropriations Committee has already provided for the fiscal year. That is all it means. Unless the money also is transferred the agency could not function.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber].

Mr. TABER. This rule would permit original appropriations to be brought in by that committee.

Mr. COCHRAN. Nothing of the kind. It only provides for the transfer to go along with the agency when it is consolidated with another agency of the money that the gentleman's committee has already given the bureau for the fiscal year. I know I am correct in that. I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Warren].

Mr. WARREN. The sole purpose that we have that provision in there as a amendment to the rule is to include in any future reorganization bill section 404 of the act of 1932, the same reorganization powers given to Mr. Hoover. That is the sole and only purpose, as far as I know, of the amendment being offered to this resolution.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] spoke about the recommendations of Mr. Hoover. I voted to give your President, Mr. Hoover, who was also my President, although not of my political party, the power to reorganize this Government. More power than was ever given to a President before or since. But when did he make this recommendation? After he was repudiated by the American people. Following the election in 1932, he sent during the short session of Congress his recommendation, and I ask you to read it. On both sides of the aisle there was a demand that the committee bring in a resolution immediately that would prevent the recommendation's going through. We held hearings-copies of the hearings are in my committee roomand I called before the committee Colonel Roop, who was Mr. Hoover's Director of the Budget. What did he say? He recommended to the committee-and it is in black and white in the hearings-that it was his opinion that Congress should not permit the Executive orders to go into force, and that President Roosevelt, who had just been elected, should be allowed to do the reorganizing. Why, Mr. Hoover even recommended taking the rivers and harbors work away from the Army engineers. That was condemned in every section of the country and by 9 out of every 10 Members of this body. Under the power we gave Mr. Hoover he could abolish not only bureaus but departments, and he likewise had the power the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] now complains of to transfer moneys already appropriated. You did not complain when we gave such powers to Mr. Hoover.

Now, in reference to holding hearings on the bills we considered in the last Congress. The joint committee held hearings and then the Senate committee held hearings. I believe we sat in the joint committee hearings for about 3 weeks. We went over to the Senate Office Building every morning. If you will take the time to read those hearings, you will find that Mr. TABER and Mr. GIFFORD participated and asked hundreds of questions. I never heard of any requests from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes] or the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] to be heard by the committee. The only two men who spoke of public hearings were the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], who were members of the select committee. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] know that there is in the public library a book of some 1.500 or more pages, which contains the record of the hearings held by their committee under the resolution to which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] called your attention. There are also in the library copies of other hearings that have been held from time to time by various committees of the Congress on the general subject of reorganizing this Government. Months were consumed in holding the hearings by the committee Mr. Mapes and Mr. Wadsworth were members of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.
Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the gentleman referring to the attempt to reorganize the executive departments made by a joint committee of the Congress back in 1924?

Mr. COCHRAN. I refer to the committee of which the gentleman from New York was a member when he was a Member of the United States Senate. I believe Senator Smoot was the chairman of that committee, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] was also a member of that committee appointed by the Speaker. Your committee held hearings, and the book containing the record of those hearings contains over 1,500 pages.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the gentleman will yield further, why could not the committee in the last Congress have held like hearings? We held open public hearings.

Mr. COCHRAN. We had the benefit of the hearings of the gentleman's committee. They were so lengthy and had taken up so much time that all we had to do was read them over. As a result, we knew what was in the minds of the people.

There has been more misleading statements circulated in this country in reference to the reorganization bills than has ever been circulated concerning any legislation that was ever presented to the Congress. One Member of this Congress went out to my own city in the fall of 1937 and made a speech to a large national organization of traffic men holding a convention, begging them to get busy on their Congressmen and not let the House of Representatives pass the reorganization bill, which he told them would give the President the power to destroy the Interstate Commerce Commission. I found his speech in the paper the next morning, relating how he had pleaded with them and urged the convention to adopt resolutions to the effect that they were not in favor of destroying the Interstate Commerce Commission and wanted it left alone. I secured the bill and quoted the specific provision in that bill that kept the President of the United States from touching the Interstate Commerce Commission, as well as other regulatory bodies. Then I got the RECORD and turned to the roll call on that bill in August 1937, and lo! and behold, I found the name of that Member of Congress shown as voting for the very bill he was asking those people to help defeat. He did not even know the bill had been passed and that it was in the Senate, and he was telling the people to have the House beat the bill, a bill he had voted for. This is a sample of the kind of bunk that was given to the people of this

When I went home last summer I discussed this matter with many, many people, and there was not one person with whom I discussed it that did not admit he did not know what was in the bill he was talking about when he sent a wire or wrote a letter seeking the defeat of the reorganization bill. I went before one organization that sent me a telegram signed by 200 members, and made a speech. They told me to select my own subject, and I talked about the reorganization bill because they had sent me the telegram. There was great confusion among the members of that organization in an attempt to find out who signed their names to that telegram. It developed the secretary signed their names to the telegram and sent it without their permission. [Applause.]

I answered every letter that came to me about the bill, and hundreds replied they had never written or wired me nor authorized anyone to sign their name to any protest. It was inspired, misleading propaganda.

There is one way to reorganize this Government and only one way. I say that because Congress will never do it. If it is to be done, power must be given to a President who will do it, and the time to do it is right now. Businessmen who complain about expenses of the Government, who demand that we simplify procedure, can come to the conclusion now they are going to continue to complain unless Congress gives the President the power to put his house in order. The Constitution and the Congress hold the President responsible for the conduct of the executive branch of the Government. Why, then, should we not give him a set-up that will enable him to efficiently and economically do his job. No greater blunder was ever committed by the Congress than the defeat of the reorganization bill last year.

President after President, Republicans and Democrats, for the last 40 years have urged a reorganization of the executive branch of the Government. It has been too long delayed.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct the typographical error in line 11 of the resolution, where the letter "n" has been omitted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact I believe nearly all of us are in favor of the passage of the resolution,

I move the previous question on the resolution and the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the resolution and the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the House divided, and there were—ayes 153, noes 102.

So the previous question was ordered.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Peterson] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I discussed on this floor provisions of the free homestead program as incorporated in H. R. 1675, introduced by myself at the beginning of this session of the Congress, an identical measure having also been presented in the other body of the Congress jointly by the two Senators from my State of Georgia. Since making those remarks, several of my colleagues have approached me expressing their interest in this legislation, several of them, much to my astonishment, suggesting that this proposal is somewhat un-American and contrary to the doctrines that have prevailed in this country for a long period of years.

Today I wish briefly to inform my colleagues more in detail as to the real provisions of this legislation and to recall to them that rather than being un-American the proposal which I have brought forward here is in strict harmony with the land policies and with the fundamental principles that have prevailed in this country from the time of its infancy.

I have here, and I ask, Mr. Speaker, permission to insert this document in the Record, figures presented to me by the General Land Office showing the total acreage of the public domain of this Nation that has been granted under the Free Homestead Acts, since their adoption, beginning in 1862, and showing the acreage for the respective States.

You will find there has been a total of over 500,000,000 acres of the public domain granted to private citizens for entry, free of debt, under that act.

In addition, I have investigated regarding the Thirteen Original Colonies and the great State of Texas, the domain of these respective governmental units never having come under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

There has been prepared data by our legislative reference bureau, giving a brief history of the public-land policies of each of these respective units. This data is too comprehensive to ask that it be placed in the Record, but it is here in my possession for your examination at any time, and you will find, as I have found, that in every State and colony of this Nation there has always prevailed a policy of free homesteads. Free land for free labor has always been a cardinal principle in every civil unit under our Federal Government, and a major portion of the land not only in these public-domain States, but in the colonies, was granted to the private citizens free of debt.

Mr. Speaker, we have been legislating here in an emergency manner, appropriating billions and billions of dollars to meet an emergency. Today, our rural population is in just as desperate a condition as it was when we began to make these appropriations.

It is unfortunate that the Federal Government failed, when it made the original free homestead provision, to throw a safeguard around the farmers of this country so that they could not mortgage or encumber their premises; so that those little, independent farm units occupied by free, liberty-loving American citizens, could be preserved; so that those families could continue to earn an honest living by the sweat of their brow in freedom and in independence. Having failed to throw these safeguards around these units, we find that the age-old practices of industry and of commerce and of finance have crept in and have assaulted these free farm units until today they are overcome by mortgages and debts, with the result that over two-thirds of the farm population today are either tenants or else have such heavy mortgages over their homes that they are in many instances in worse condition than if they were tenants.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I again assert that it is absurd for us as Congressmen to hope to continue to preserve free institutions among a people who do not themselves enjoy their freedom. It is impossible to maintain free government among tenants and among serfs. If we will take a small portion of the money that we are throwing away, in many instances, in useless undertakings, and in other instances in experiments, which are doomed before they are initiated, and go back to the traditional American policy of purchasing farm units and making them again available for destitute farm families, and providing that these farm units cannot be mortgaged or encumbered, and then placing farm families on these farms, we will find that we have then initiated a program which will begin to lead us out of this chaotic condition and place us again in a position of independence and in a position where the people themselves will demand free government and where the people themselves will demand economical government.

A Member of Congress is inclined to vote, regardless of what party he belongs to, according to the wishes of the majority of his constituents. If a majority of those constituents have lost all their hope, if they have no hope of ever getting possession of a little plot of land for themselves as a home, if they have no hope of ever again being placed in the position of economic independence where they can have a home to call their own, then they do not care whether government remains democratic or not, they do not care whether you balance the Budget or not, whether you initiate soil conservation and various soil-benefit programs or not. It is to their benefit to get every dollar of the public funds that they can possibly get, or of funds from any other source, so they are prone to demand of their Representatives and Senators extravagant expenditures. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, if this Congress will, rather than continue to spend forever and forever, going forward to a condition of complete chaos, if we will take a small portion of these funds and enact legislation that will gradually bring the people back to ownership of their own little farm units, we will find that we will have started in the right direction. Every time we place a farm family on a little piece of farm land and preserve and protect that homestead for that family against the encroachments of greed and avarice of the financial interests of the country, we will have made a good libertyloving American citizen out of that man and his family. free farm, owned and occupied by a free citizen and his family, is the ideal breeding place for the germ of human liberty. It is the cornerstone of free government, and we can orate all we please, and cry over the condition of the people of this country as much as we wish, but so long as we fail to return to the American doctrine of free land for free labor, providing for every human within the bounds of this country as he is born under the plan of the Divine Creatoras long as we fail to give him an opportunity to have a place in which to stand, a place in which to live, a place where he may earn his meat and bread on an equal basis with all other mankind—then so long will we fail to properly function as a legislative body representing a great free people. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Does the gentleman's bill provide any safeguard for those farmers which will prevent the politician from taxing the farms away from them?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not provide any safeguard to keep the politician from taxing these farm units away from them, but the politician under our representative system of government is elected by the people, and when the people in the respective districts see that it is to their benefit by ownership of their own homes to keep down taxes, then you will find the politicians advocating the reduction of taxes, and until that time does come, there is no advantage to a politician to advocate it, because the people themselves have lost their homes and holdings and are not primarily interested in reducing taxes. A majority of the farmers, who are the backbone of this Nation, are bankrupt today, and there is no hope on earth for them under any legislation so far enacted to regain their homes, to get out of this condition of bankruptcy.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. HAWKS. Will the gentleman agree then that during the past number of years under the Triple A, agriculture in this country has not progressed to the point where it should have progressed.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I agree to that, and not only do I agree to that but I stated here a few days ago that this question was one of the crying issues in America and had been so from the time of the Louisiana Purchase until 1862, when we finally adopted the free homestead plan to protect the farmers, and your Republican Party grew into power because it had the foresight to adopt a program of this kind, as I read into the RECORD a few days ago; and so long as the Republican Party remained true to the farmers of the country it was in power, but when that party forgot the source of its greatness the people of America rose and trampled it under foot and today they have wrested that power from that party hoping that another party will bring to them again the relief they need. But, although both parties have voted for the emergency legislation, which has done great good, yet no party has yet initiated a national program which will again help solve the problems of the farmers of this country. Today I am pleading with all of you for the adoption of such a program.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman speaks about the A. A. A. As one Member on this side of the aisle I voted and worked against crop-control legislation. I ask the gentleman this question: What is the financial participation or obligation of the individual to be helped by the Government in placing that individual and a member of his family upon this land?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. In that respect I do not propose to change the law at all. I propose to again make operative the Homestead Act of 1862, which is still the law, and under which over 500,000,000 acres of land passed into private ownership and over 3,000,000 farm families secured free farm homesteads.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Then when the gentleman is attacked for bringing in an un-American program, it is just a continuation of the law which has been carried forward through the years?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Absolutely; with this one additional provision, that should have been written into the original act, that these homestead units cannot become the subject of barter. They cannot be mortgaged or encumbered, but shall be kept inviolate, where farm families can live and earn for themselves the necessities of life.

I want to tell you another good feature about this.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Would the gentleman include as a part of the free land all of the farms that have been foreclosed by the Federal land bank during the last 3 years?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. If the gentleman will read this bill, he will see that it provides that where foreclosures have been made since January 1, 1920, and the land is still in the hands of the mortgagee, it will come under the provisions, and the original mortgagor will be given a prior right to the homesteading of his original home.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman knows that at the present time if a mortgagor loses his farm to the Federal land bank, the Federal land bank will not sell it back to him unless he pays the full amount of the indebtedness, plus interest, taxes, and other costs, but that the Federal land bank will sell it to other outside parties for about half the price or whatever they can get for it.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I appreciate the gentleman contributing that observation.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's view-point, but the gentleman talks about having a free farm citizenry who own their own homes, yet he takes away from them the right to dispose of that land. Has that not always been considered as an incident of property—that is, the right to sell?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Particularly by the financial interests. If the gentleman will study the history of his own State, he will find that when a division was opened by the General Land Office for private entry, the first thing you had was the financial interests of Wall Street plunging in, attempting to mortgage and encumber and buy away from those farmers the farm homesteads. That is one of the fundamental principles of government, to protect citizens, to protect the weak, and provide opportunities for the weak to live in independence, equally with the strong.

It was never intended, under free government, for us to provide primarily for the strong financial interests of this country. Neither was it intended that we should destroy the strong financial interests, but the true principle of our free representative government is to let the strong grow as strong as they may, let the rich grow as rich as they please, but put safeguards there where never can the strong or rich oppress the weak and needy. The only foundation upon which you can build such a structure is keep land always open, so that when a man loses his job in the city, when all his hope is gone in the various industrial pursuits and in the various professional pursuits, when, as we know, he has still got to eat and he has still got to stand on earth if he lives, when those conditions come about there is always a city of refuge, a gateway for him to flee from the oppressions of the mighty and the rich. The only gateway, the only city of refuge you can properly provide for him is a little plot of soil, where he can carry his family and live in freedom and independence. That piece of soil should not be a question of barter and trade.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. That, in effect, is treating the farmer as an incompetent, is it not? We do not put those restrictions upon any other group in this country except the Indians, as a group, or those who have been adjudged to be incompetent. Is it the gentleman's opinion that those who take up these homesteads should be treated as incompetents? I am not asking that facetiously. I am asking that in all sincerity.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. No, sir. I do not propose that they should be treated as incompetents, but the gentleman knows that from the dawn of time the fight has always been the strong against the weak. Our system of government was set up so as to safeguard the strong in their strength and at the same time protect the weak in their weakness. Now, our system of government does not provide that you should go out here and take a weak man and set him up and take away from the strong man and give of his resources to that weak man, but it does provide, as a land of opportunity, that you keep open always to that weak man the opportunity to earn an honest living in political equality and in economic equality with the strong and the rich.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McGranery). The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hoffman] has a special order. If that is agreeable to him.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. HAWKS. I believe the gentleman knows I am very sympathetic to this matter.

Does not the gentleman agree with me that the bankers, the local bankers in our small communities—I am not talking about the international bankers or the big bankers, but about the conscientious, hard-working banker in the local community—does not the gentleman agree that during the past years this local, conscientious, hard-working banker has tried to work with the weak, has tried to provide them money, has tried to help them finance their farms?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. They have done good work along that line.

Mr. HAWKS. I would like to have an appreciation of the local banker, the small-town banker really impressed on the minds of the Members.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I am not meaning to condemn any institution, for I think we have all been caught in the jaws of a vice. I think nobody is particularly responsible. We have just had an economic system that has drifted along with the financial institutions trying to get all the collateral they could, all the holdings they could until they have driven the producer of the raw products, the man who is the foundation of our whole economic structure, the farmer, to a condition of serfdom where he has lost his farm home, where he has lost his means of livelihood, where he has lost nearly everything that he must have in order to earn bread and butter so that he can live and his family may eat.

I am simply proposing, sirs, that we again open up the land to the average citizen of America. I am not asking that you give him one penny. I am not asking that you put one citizen on the dole. I am asking that we again provide an opportunity for that citizen himself to procure the necessities of life. If the gentleman does not like the provision of my bill prohibiting mortgages or encumbrances of the land, if the gentleman is really interested in helping to the land, if the gentleman is really interested in helping to the land, if the independent homestead units of this country, I would be delighted to work with him. I will welcome any cooperation in behalf of this principle.

Mr. HOPE. I may say to the gentleman that I am not sure I disagree with him, but I did want to get his viewpoint. I would like to ask the gentleman another question if he would be kind enough to yield. I do not want to take too much of his time.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. It has been true in the past, has it not, that ownership of land and the ability to mortgage it has in many instances furnished farmers with a source of credit they would not otherwise have had, and that in many, many instances the debt has been paid off?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. In very few instances, comparatively, have the mortgages been repaid, and I doubt the wisdom of the vast majority of the mortgages. It is true that banks in many instances have made loans with farms as collateral; however, farm land is considered a frozen asset, and it is not good business for any bank to use farm land as collateral, because the money is then tied up indefinitely. With the production credit associations and the emergency crop and feed loan organizations, and other lending agencies, we find that the average farmer has all the help he could possibly hope for or need under normal conditions without a farm mortgage.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. HAWKS. Is it not a fact that the subsidies of the Government during the last 4 years of the New Deal have just about destroyed the credit of the small farmer of this country?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I would not care to argue that point. I am inclined to think that a great deal of good has come to the farmers out of the expenditure of these funds, but it has not yet touched the basic spot; it has not yet offered a program that is going to help little old John Jones back in Montgomery County, Ga., to get on his feet to the point where he and his family can live without calling upon the Government for financial aid or for meat and bread. This is what we need to do. This could be done not only for John Jones in Montgomery County, Ga., in my First District, but for people in every other district of this country.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he proposes to let these men have this land. Does the gentleman intend also to start them farming by way of providing tools and equipment?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. My proposition goes back to the old original homestead law under which the gentleman's State was developed. Was it provided then?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Never mind about that; I am asking about present conditions.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Was it provided in those days? It is the same law that I want to put into operation again.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I understand that the gentleman is going to give me land because I cannot make a living today, and have no money. Is he as well as buying the land going to equip me with tools that I may make a living from the land?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. The gentleman can introduce a bill to that effect, if he wishes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is that the gentleman's purpose?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. It is not my intention now to debate that feature. My plan would operate under the homestead act that is the same today as it has been since it was enacted. I am just proposing that we make land available to the people under the provisions of the homestead act that has proven so successful for three-quarters of a century.

As to the cost of the proposition that is nothing new, for in numerous instances this Nation has bought land and given it to farm families free of debt. In 1803 we bought over 500,000,000 acres of land from France.

We took this land and divided it into homesteads.

We bought land from Spain in 1819. We bought land from Russia in 1867. We bought land from Texas. We bought land from Mexico. We bought land from numerous sources and opened that land up for free entry not only to American citizens but to citizens throughout the world. From 1862 to 1885, under the Homestead Act of 1862, history records that one of the greatest migrations of mankind in the history of the world took place. During that time distressed families from Europe sought refuge in the free domain of America, and it was from the settlement made by those Europeans that sprung many of your great districts. Many of you gentlemen sitting here are descendants of some of those homesteaders. You know the benefits of a free-land policy. Yet why do you gentlemen sit silently in your seats when the benefits of a free homestead policy are rapidly vanishing? When those benefits vanish all free government will vanish. Why do you sit here in your seats and fail to raise your voice to amend the free-homestead acts that brought about the greatness of your districts so that like benefits may be worked out for your descendants?

Mr. Speaker, as I stated, we bought these lands from foreign countries and gave them to farm families. Can there be anything wrong in again buying land and again giving it to farm families? I am simply proposing today to help the farmer. He is in a hopeless plight insofar as land and the farms are concerned. The little banks are in a hopeless plight. The Government itself and the lending agencies, all of us, have got caught in a jam. The lending agencies do not want the land. They want the people put back to where they can be prosperous and where they can do business.

The Government does not want the land, neither do the various agencies that have taken it over; yet the people cannot live on this land under present conditions, and they are unable to purchase it back.

Is it not the duty of the Congress, when everybody is in a jam, to do something to relieve the situation instead of refusing to see the situation as it is? We are day after day voting away billions and billions of the resources of this country, driving ourselves deeper and deeper into bankruptcy. Is it not the part of common sense and wisdom to attempt to unravel these distressed conditions and help financial institutions get relieved of their burden and help the farmer get back into a position of economic independence and, as a matter of fact, help all of us where we can again regulate our own affairs in a normal way? It appears to me a most simple, fundamental American proposition to do that. I am proposing such a course in this measure.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman has been fighting for this legislation for several years, and I have been very much interested in many of the arguments he has presented on the floor of the House. The trouble of the farmers in my State is not so much the acquiring of new land as to keep the land they already have. They are losing their land by the hundreds of thousands of acres.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. How are they going to keep it?

Mr. STEFAN. I would suggest the gentleman read the Frazier-Lemke refinancing bill.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I am not objecting to the gentleman's proposal. In fact, I commend the gentleman from Nebraska and the other Members who are sponsoring this legislation, for the serious effort you are making to really help your farmers out of their present plight. I congratulate you for the time, thought, and study you are devoting to this vital problem.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the Record and to include a document mentioned during my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Peterson]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. Hobbs asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I received this morning permission to extend my own remarks in the RECORD. At this time I ask unanimous consent to include in my extension of remarks certain tabulations concerning the increase in the importations of tapioca in this country and the effect that those importations have on various industries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER]? There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, on Monday last I obtained unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD. I find the remarks will take two and a half pages of the RECORD. I renew my unanimous-consent request at this time, notwithstanding the fact these remarks will take two and a half pages of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter received by me and the reply thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]? There was no objection.

THE WAGNER ACT DOES NOT PROTECT THE WORKER

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, every one in the House who has given the matter any thought probably realizes that the question of amending the Wagner Act will be brought up during this session of the Congress. It is not my purpose to speak today at length on the law or any proposed amendments but to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that from time to time I shall put into the Record communications received from employees tending to show the criticism of the law as it exists and of the actions of the National Labor Relations Board as that Board has been functioning since 1935 when the law went into

That the C. I. O., or at least some of those who assume to speak for it or to act in its behalf have assumed for some time that the Board was its ally in the C. I. O.'s warfare on other labor organizations and in its attempt to force employees into its organization is made evident by news items contained in the press of yesterday.

It appears from the Detroit papers that a complaint has been filed with the N. L. R. B. at Detroit, charging Homer Martin, president of the U. A. W. A., with unfair labor practices. The internal fights, jurisdictional, legal, and physical, which have taken place between those who are seeking to be acknowledged as representatives of the automobile workers reached a climax when the charges were filed against Martin.

It will be recalled that, not so long ago, Martin expelled four of the high officials of his organization, charging them with Communism and with seeking to disrupt the organization. Those expelled answered his charge with one of like nature and Martin finally was compelled by the C. I. O. to reinstate the officers he had removed. Still more recently, the battle was renewed.

The expelled but reinstated officers and some of their friends now charge Martin, who was attempting to unionize Ford workers, with aiding the Ford authorities in the establishment of a company controlled or dominated union.

The situation has become so chaotic that General Motors has been forced to refuse to bargain with either faction until it is definitely decided who actually represents the employees.

Here we have a concrete illustration of how the man who works, the employee, is being deprived of his right to bargain collectively through representatives of his own choosing.

The stake, of course, is the huge fund that will be derived from the dues collected from the thousands of workers in the automobile industry.

Recently Martin charged those opposed to him with the responsibility for more than 1,000 wildcat strikes called in the General Motors plants since the bargaining contract was signed in February of 1937.

Martin's opponents charge him with excessive spending of union funds, as much as $2,200 a month. He replied by saying that he spent as much as $2,800 in some months but that it was for legitimate expenses. In return, he pointed to Addes, one of the officers formerly expelled but reinstated, and charged that his expense account was $3,500 on one occasion. He further said that one of the vice presidents admitted under oath that he had spent $198 for whisky in 1 day and that he had also spent $800 that he could not account for.

Martin also charged that funds of the Plymouth local had been used to aid the Communist Party and that "$2,495 went down in the stewards' jeans."

Speaking for the opposition, Thomas, a former confidant of Martin, alleged that Martin was a dictator, had suspended 15 of the officers of the organization; that in 1 week he spent $45 for taxicabs and $80 for meals and concluded:

All I can figure out is that he must have been eating his meals in the cabs to spend that much.

Out of the whole sorry mess it is evident that the workingman, his interests, his rights, are being forgotten in the struggle.

The whole situation is proof sufficient that the Wagner law is not serving the purpose for which it was enacted. This is but one illustration of the fact that the act as now written and administered is the cause of industrial conflict.

Prior to and upon the enactment of the Wagner law, many people assumed that its main purpose was to protect the individual worker, to secure to him the right to organize free from coercion and to give him collective bargaining.

Unfortunately, the act was so drawn as to vest almost unlimited authority in a labor board created by the act. That Board deprives the worker of the rights the act declared he should have.

It is quite true that section 7 explicitly declared:

Employees shall have the right to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in concerted activities, for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.

In practice, however, employees have time and again been denied the right of self-organization, the right to form, join, or assist labor organizations of their choice and the right to bargain through representatives of their own choosing.

The Board has seen fit to assume the right, and this sometimes without public hearing and public report, to designate the bargaining agency.

Time and time again the Board has destroyed organizations of the workers and refused them recognition.

I will not at this time make any extended argument showing how the Board has deprived workers of the rights supposed to be guaranteed to them by section 7 of the act. That subject will be more fully discussed when the Wagner law comes up for amendment, a task which we might as well assume now as later.

The purpose today is to call attention to a few protests received from employees who thought that, under section 7 of the labor act, they had the right to form their own organization and to bargain with their employer. All these letters were addressed to me personally and came either from Crystal City or Festus, Mo., within the last 2 weeks. They are as follows:

We protest the un-American decision of the N. L. R. B. in disregarding the wishes of the huge majority of the workers of Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. works, No. 9, at Crystal City, Mo.
CRYSTAL CITY GLASS WORKERS UNION,
ALFONSE L. LAIBEN, President.

My Dear Congressman: As an American citizen, I am taking this opportunity to ask you to do something about this un-American decision handed us—the workers of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., of Crystal City, Mo. The employees have formed their own union, the Crystal City Glass Workers Union. We have a huge majority, and why must we be ruled by a minority? The decision was given us by the N. L. R. B., favoring the C. I. O. You, as our Congressman, won't you endeavor to do something for us? Try to amend the Wagner Act and the N. L. R. B. We need your help.

We need your help. Yours truly,

BEN W. HOFFMAN, Crystal City, Mo.

DEAR SIR: In regard to the un-American decision handed down by the N. L. R. B., giving the C. I. O. bargaining rights at plant No. 9 of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., at Crystal City, we of the independent union, having a large majority of membership, cannot and will not accept this communistic decision. Any support you can give us at this time will be greatly appreciated.

Respectfully,

BARNEY W. BERKBIGLER,
Member of the C. C. G. W. U. Union, Crystal City, Mo.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I resent an act which allows a few men like the N. L. R. B. to hand down a decision that they did the past week by ordering Pittsburgh Plate Glass works, No. 9, to recognize the C. I. O., whereby the majority should rule to be free Americanism. The independent union at time of hearing had more than 1,500 members, and now has reached about 1,700 of the 2,000 employees of works No. 9, at Crystal City, Mo., and I feel that you as one of the Representatives of the House, should do all in your power to stop such injustice against the voters. Thanking you for all you have done in the past and hope that you will continue in this matter as you have, and wishing for more "justice in the future," I am, DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I resent an act which allows a few men like Sincerely,

Mr. John V. DeGeare, Employees of Works No. 9, Crystal City, Mo.

DEAR SIR: A great injustice has been done to the people of our community. The Labor Board has given us a raw deal by giving the decision to the smallest majority of C. I. O. Our independent union, C. C. G. W. O., has 1,500 employees. The Labor Board law has to be changed. We are not going to stand for that kind of law. We expect to get some action out of this. An employee.

JOSEPH WHISTLER, Route 2, Festus, Mo.

DEAR SIR: We, the people of this community, have got an unjust decision from the Labor Board. The Labor Board has ordered the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., No. 9, here to recognize the C. I. O. Our independent union, C. C. G. W. U., has 1,500 members out of about 1,800 employees in this factory. Our community wants the right decision handed down to us. There is no right to that kind of Labor Board law. What do we vote for? Don't we live in United States of America? Please do something about this at court. An employee. An employee.

GEORGE WHISTLER, 909 South Second Street, Festus, Mo.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I think the decision of the N. L. R. B. was unfair to the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. and the Crystal City Glass Workers Union at works No. 9, at Crystal City, Mo., and should be revised.

Yours truly.

LESTER A. GROBE. Mrs. Lester Grobe. Edward G. Grobe.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Protest the unfair decision of the N. L. R. B. in regard the Crystal City Independent Glass Workers Union.

Sincerely.

JOHN L. SEIFERT, R. R. No. 1, Festus, Mo.

DEAR SIR: You well know the dirty tactics of the few C. I. O. we have here at plant No. 9 at Crystal City and yet we still are signing new members in our independent union. Even with the communistic help of the N. L. R. B., they can't get any support here. We have an 80-percent majority and still holding it.

We need your support if you can help.

J. L. HOLLADAY, Member, C. C. G. W. U.

My Dear Congressman: Please accept my protest of the unfair decision of the N. L. R. B. last Saturday in Washington, D. C., against us at Crystal City, Mo., as one of 1,600 of the independent glass workers here. Will you vote for and support the bill presented by Hon. C. Arthur Anderson, M. C., or legislation similar to curb this unfair and un-American Board in their C. I. O.

(Signed) ANDREW L. GODAT, Crystal City, Mo.

P.S.—You saw how they would not let you make your address in this city in November 1938.

Dear Sir: I hereby voice my protest against a law that will permit a kangaroo court of a few men like the N. L. R. B. to hand down an unjust decision as the one they gave the workers at the Pittsburgh Plate Glass works, No. 9, at Crystal City, Mo., this past week. Although the Crystal City Glass Workers Union, an independent union, has over fifteen hundred paid-up members out of about two thousand people employed in the factory. This Labor Board says the factory must bargain with the C. I. O. We are legally organized and incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri. We are in no ways dominated by the company, although we cannot get a hearing or a vote on bargaining rights. I feel that you, as our Representative, should try to do something about a law that does not heed the wishes of a majority. I have always felt that this was a free America and majority rules. Thanking you in advance for your kind consideration you may give this. An employee and member of Crystal City Glass Workers Union.

J. F. Jokust.

J. F. JOKUST.

My Dear Congressman: As an employee of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., of Crystal City, Mo., I wish to express my opinion to you of the unfair decision of the N. L. R. B. of Washington, D. C., January 14. With the hope that you may in some way be able to assist us in regaining our peace that has prevailed and we have realized and enjoyed throughout the years.

Thanking you for your interest and influence in this case,

Sincerely.

P. F. MAGRE.

FEBRUARY 1, 1939.

Mr. Alphonse L. Laiben, President, Crystal City Glass Workers' Union, Crystal City, Mo.

Crystal City, Mo.

Dear Mr. Laiben: Received your wire, reading:
"We protest the un-American decision of the N. L. R. B. in disregarding the wishes of the huge majority of the workers of Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. works, No. 9, at Crystal City, Mo."
Replying, permit me to say:
If the N. L. R. B. proceeded under section 9 without a formal hearing at which your union had an opportunity to be heard and was represented, the Wagner law, even though your union represents an overwhelming majority of the workers, leaves you without remedy. You have no appeal to the court or to any other tribunal.

out remedy. You have no appeal to the court or to any other tribunal.

Under that section of the act you will note that the Board is given authority not only to designate the unit which the representatives shall represent in collective bargaining but in selecting that unit it may (section 9 (c)), either take a secret ballot of the employees or "utilize any other suitable method to ascertain such representatives."

Using this authority so unjustly conferred upon it, the Board has in other cases selected representatives which did not represent the

Using this authority so unjustly conferred upon it, the Board has in other cases selected representatives which did not represent the majority of the employees in the unit.

A reading of the law will show you that it affords no protection to workers as against the Board or a rival union.

Republicans in the House will make an effort to so amend this act as to protect not only the employee but the employer, and to remove some of the causes for industrial warfare affecting interstate commerce.

There may be a possible way out of your difficulty by reorganizing your union, if the Board claims it is company dominated; making it a union of the employees, free from influence of any kind on the part of the employer and then, if the employer refuses to recognize your representatives, file charges against the employer with the Board.

There is at least one case where the employer and the Board have acted together to deprive employees of the right to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. In that particular case, the employer was evidently forced into the that particular case, the employer was evidently forced into the agreement by the Board.

If that is the situation with you, by organizing your independent union and filing charges against the employer, you may be able to force a hearing, a final order, and then appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. It is a long, tough road, made doubly so by the attitude of the Board.

Regardless of the Board's attitude, much of the trouble will remain with us until the law is amended.

Sincerely yours.

Sincerely yours,

CLARE E. HOFFMAN.

SWEETPOTATOES

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. Derouen. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, it is my purpose to call your attention to the growing of sweetpotatoes. Perhaps it is strange that I call this to the attention of the House, but we find ourselves in the midst of confusion, with all sorts of regulations and controls, and we must direct our attention to the use of land for other purposes than the growing of our five major crops.

Looking over the agricultural statistics I find there are 20 States which are vitally interested in the raising and cultivation of sweetpotatoes. They are New Jersey, Indiana, Illinois, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Texas, California, and a few other States. The three major sweetpotatogrowing States are Louisiana, Virginia, and New Jersey, in the order named.

At the Louisiana State University we have been doing extensive research work in an attempt to control the many diseases and insects which are peculiar to sweetpotatoes. As you know, the sweetpotato is a tuber and is apt to contract rot from roots and infections in the ground. At this time we have produced by experiment a sweetpotato that will bloom as it has never done in this country-and will produce seed, and this is something new. We believe that by further research along the lines that we have been carrying on at the university we can furnish throughout the United States seed which can be controlled. Sweetpotatoes more or less have a tendency to acquire the diseases that are in the land, and by breeding we can treat the seed so the diseases will not be transferred to the new area or to the next potato that comes along. We also have in mind controlling the sizes, and we believe that through the experiments we are carrying on in Louisiana we can produce an attractive potato instead of irregular, small, or crooked potatoes.

I believe the sweetpotato industry should be delved into more thoroughly, so we may make use of some of the lands that are lying idle, and, for instance, because we may not be permitted to raise more of one crop or another, we should substitute in one crop what we lose in another.

The sweetpotato is the most important single food and feed crop in the South. It is outranked only by the Irish potato as a vegetable crop for the entire Nation. It has often been said that had it not been for the sweetpotato on many occasions a large portion of the population would have gone hungry. The sweetpotato has also aided greatly in supplying food for armies of the Revolution as well as for later conflicts.

As a food, it is a particularly balanced one. It contains practically all of the growth vitamins; it is reasonably high in proteins; and is particularly high in carbohydrates, such as dextrins and sucrose.

The sweetpotato was originally introduced from the more tropical areas of North America, probably from the West Indies, and when brought under conditions of continental North America it rarely, if ever, produced seed, and therefore it has been reproduced asexually from the time it was originally introduced. Any improvements in this crop have resulted from vegetative mutations, therefore systematic improvement has been slow.

Realizing the great importance of the sweetpotato crop, the Louisiana Agricultural Experiment Station has made every effort to improve it in Louisiana, and in the past 2 years methods have been worked out for inducing the sweetpotato to bloom and set seed under Louisiana conditions. The past season we have been able to grow around 1,500 seedlings, and for the coming year we will probably have around 4,000; whereas, in reality, under an expanded breeding program, we should have at least 15,000. Due to limited equipment and manpower, our program has been hampered materially.

Our purpose in breeding the sweetpotato are threefold: First. To improve the nutritive value, market quality, and shape. This would include breeding for high sugar and vitamin content, and for a very uniform shape. Most of our varieties are very ill-shaped and the growers are able to market only about 50 to 60 percent of the crop.

Second. To breed varieties having a higher starch content than existing varieties. The importance of starch is increasing in Southern States. We are now importing over $9,000,000 worth of cassava starch per year, used primarily in the South in the manufacture of paper and in the textile mills, which could be made from the sweetpotato. Incidentally, this cassava starch is coming in duty-free under the name of cassava flour. To produce higher yields of starch would require varieties bred for that purpose. Good starch varieties should yield from 20 to 30 percent starch. Table varieties usually run around 16 to 18 percent starch.

Third. To breed varieties resistant to diseases, such as the soil, stem, and black rots. These diseases are taking a heavy toll at the present time. The soil rot in particular is threatening the sweetpotato-producing areas of Louisiana, while the stem and black rots are more severe in other important sweetpotato regions of the country.

Systematic and rapid progress with the above three items can only be made through sexual breeding.

To indicate the great interest in the sweetpotato improvement program, delegates from practically every Southern State and representatives from States as far north as Delaware, Indiana, Iowa, and Kansas have made special trips to the Louisiana Agricultural Experiment Station to study the work under way there. They are anxious to see the work expanded so that they might take greater advantages of the work now under way.

We have here a challenge to American enterprise, and especially to the South, where the sweetpotato could be grown in unlimited quantities and of superior quality. The maximum capacity of the Southern States for sweetpotato production is not known. Sweetpotato growing has been more than a minor farm industry.

Never before has an appropriation been requested for this important crop. It has been estimated by the growers and horticulturists interested in the improvement of the crop that the expenditures necessary to take care of the need for improvement of this crop in the various States would require an annual appropriation of only $80,000.

In closing, I wish to urge the Representatives of the various sweetpotato-producing States to join with me in appealing to the Appropriations Committee for the needed $80,000 which is necessary to carry on the investigations and research now under way. This sum should be included as an item in the Department of Agriculture appropriations bill.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules may be able to conclude its hearings and file a report on the so-called Dies resolution by tomorrow, so I ask unanimous consent that the committee may have until midnight tomorrow to file that report.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman, why this rush? Why must the Committee on Rules rush its report on the Dies resolution? Why not give the Members of the House an opportunity at least to study the hearings of the Dies committee and study its report, so we can intelligently debate the question when it comes before the House.

Mr. SABATH. I may say for myself it is my aim to give each and every Member a reasonable amount of time to be heard. The Members of the Committee on Rules desire to get this matter out of the way, consequently they have asked me to make the request I have submitted. We are going to have a hearing on the resolution at 3 o'clock this afternoon and it will continue tomorrow morning, in the hope of completing the hearings and taking action on the resolution by tomorrow.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am not going to object because an objection to this request will only restrict further the time of the Members waiting to be heard before the Rules Committee; but I simply wish to state for the Record that this whole proceeding is being railroaded and rushed through without any justification.

Mr. HAWKS. What is? The resolution on the Dies committee?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Correct.

Mr. HAWKS. Judging by the information I received from the gentleman's office this morning, I would not say they were railroading anything. The gentleman sent me enough information to show me that he has analyzed the report perfectly.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes, I have; but how about the other Members? How many members of the Committee on Rules have read the hearings of the Dies committee?

Mr. HAWKS. How can the gentleman speak for the rest of the membership?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am stating facts. I say we should have adequate time to study the three volumes of the hearings and the full report of that committee.

Mr. HAWKS. The gentleman has plenty of information, judging by what he sent to my office this morning.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Certainly; that shows I have been working on it for weeks.

Mr. HAWKS. Is the gentleman intimating I have not analyzed the Dies committee report?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am not intimating. I am saying that in view of the fact there are three volumes of the hearings and a lengthy report there has not been sufficient time for the Members of the House to digest this information.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend in the RECORD the remarks I made this morning

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I. of course, do not expect to object, may I ask the chairman of the Committee on Rules if it is his intention to bring the Dies resolution up for consideration in the House on

Mr. SABATH. That is the desire of the majority of the committee. I felt we should take a little more time, but they desire early action. Consequently we are going to meet at 3 o'clock today and meet again tomorrow in order to give all the Members who so desire an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman has secured unanimous consent to file the report on that resolution any time tomorrow. If the committee acts and the report is filed tomorrow, is it the gentleman's intention to bring the resolution up for consideration on the floor of the House on Friday?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; provided such action meets with the approval of the Speaker and time is available.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONKIEWICZ. Mr. Speaker, 2 days ago I obtained unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein the inaugural address of Governor Baldwin, of Connecticut. I have been informed by the Printer the address is a little too long to come within the rule and that I should get special permission for its insertion in the RECORD. I ask for that special permission at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

743. By Mr. ASHBROOK: Joint resolution of the Ohio Legislature, relating to the failure of Social Security Board to pay Ohio October 1938 quota of old-age pension funds; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

744. By Mr. BALL: Petitions of certain citizens of Willimantic, Conn., favoring the general policy of neutrality as set forth in the act of August 31, 1935, and as amended by the act of May 1, 1937; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. 745. By Mr. BOLLES: Petition of sundry citizens of Monroe, Wis., requesting that we adhere to the general policy of neutrality contained in the act of August 31, 1935, and in the act of May 1, 1937; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

746. By Mr. COFFEE of Washington: Resolution of the Seattle National Farm Loan Association, T. A. Garrett, secretary-treasurer, Auburn, Wash., pointing out that the extremely dry weather of the last summer, together with an unusually low price of milk and its products, has made it impossible in many cases for farmers to meet their installments on Federal farm loans, and calling attention to the fact that many are faced with foreclosure and loss of their homes, which would result in their having to be either supported by public-relief agencies or left to starve, and therefore urgently requesting that Congress repass the act to suspend payments on the principal of farm loans until such time as the agricultural situation improves; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

747. Also, resolution of the port of Tacoma, a municipal corporation of Tacoma, Wash., pointing out that the United States has ownership of lands under navigable waters but that title to such lands is by right and by law vested in the several States; asserting that the States cannot be deprived of their rights to the ownership of such lands without just compensation; alleging that legislation denying the States such rights would cast a cloud upon title to such lands; and therefore opposing House Joint Resolution No. 24, which would seek to revest in the United States sovereign title to, or ownership of, lands under navigable waters, or any mineral deposits therein; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

748. Also, resolution of Local 1-9, International Longshoremen and Warehousemen's Union, of Seattle, Wash., Hugh R. Bradshaw, secretary, pointing out that the Dies committee was established by Congress to investigate subversive activities but has actually suppressed and ignored abundant evidence that Fascist spies were working openly in the United States; asserting that the committee has attempted to plaster all Progressive and Democratic organizations as communistic; insisting that the accused were not afforded opportunity to appear in their defense; alleging that the committee has attacked President Roosevelt and labor leaders; therefore urging that Congress deny additional appropriation and continuance of the Dies committee; to the Committee on Rules.

749. By Mr. CONNERY: Petition of the supreme board of directors, Knights of Columbus, New Haven, Conn., opposing any action of Congress which would result in a lifting of the embargo on the shipment of arms and munitions to Spain; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

750. Also, petition of the City Council of Revere, Mass., protesting against any reduction of the Works Progress Administration and urging an appropriation of a sufficient sum of money—at least $875,000,000—to provide for those now on the Works Progress Administration rolls; to the Committee on Appropriations.

751. By Mr. ELSTON: Petition of Rev. Eugene C. Gerlach, pastor, and parishioners of St. Margaret of Cortona Church, Madisonville, Cincinnati, Ohio, requesting adherence to the general policy of neutrality contained in the acts of August 31, 1935, and May 1, 1937; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

752. Also, petition of Rev. Warren C. Lilly, pastor, and parishioners of Bellarmine Chapel, Cincinnati, Ohio, requesting adherence to the general policy of neutrality contained in the acts of August 31, 1935, and May 1, 1937; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

753. By Mr. GILLIE: Petition of Mrs. J. H. Brooks and 80 other residents of Fort Wayne, Ind., urging that Congress shall adhere to the general policy of neutrality, and that Congress launch an investigation of those leftists groups which are sponsoring propaganda favoring the lifting of the embargo on arms to "red" Spain; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

754. Also, petition of 89 residents of Decatur, Ind., urging the Congress, for as long as we shall adhere to the general policy of neutrality as enunciated in the act of August 31, 1935, to retain on our statute books the further and corollary principle enunciated in the act of May 1, 1937, extending the original act to include civil as well as international conflicts; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

755. Also, petition of 94 residents of Waterloo, Ind., petitioning Congress, for as long as we shall adhere to the general policy of neutrality as enunciated in the act of August 31, 1935, to retain on our statute books the further and corollary principle enunciated in the act of May 1, 1937, extending the original act to include civil as well as international conflicts; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

756. Also, petition of Samuel Lewis and 45 other residents of Fort Wayne, Ind., urging the speedy enactment of the Townsend plan bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

757. Also, petition of A. H. Burns and 13 other residents of Fort Wayne, Ind., urging the Congress to maintain the Spanish embargo, and provide adequate defense of our own country but to avoid anything tending to involve us in European or Asiatic disputes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

758. By Mr. HANCOCK: Petition of Rev. H. C. McDowell and other residents of Syracuse, N. Y., favoring the general policy of neutrality as enunciated in the acts of August 31, 1935, and May 1, 1937; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

759. By Mr. HARTER of New York: Petition of certain users of bakers' goods; to the Committee on Agriculture.

760. By Mr. HAWKS: Petition of 21 residents of Klevenville and Cross Plains, Wis., protesting against any change in the neutrality policy of our country; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

761. Also, petition of 88 members of the Holy Name Society of Watertown, Wis., protesting against any change in the neutrality policy of our country; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

762. By Mr. HOOK: Petition of H. L. Deming, urging an increase in the Works Progress Administration appropriation and increases in wages in the Works Progress Administration; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

763. By Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON: Petition of C. A. Edge, of Bryan, Tex., favoring House bill No. 220, repealing the Federal retail dealers' license on oleomargarine; to the Committee on Agriculture.

764. By Mr. KEAN: Resolution adopted by the La Salle Society, of Newark, N. J., urging the Congress to adhere to the general policy of neutrality as set forth in the act of August 31, 1935, and amended May 1, 1937; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

765. Also, memorial of the Newark Chapter, American Red Cross, endorsing the action taken by the International Red Cross Conference in London, June 20, 1938, asking all governments to take the necessary steps to bring about agreements which will prevent the bombing from the air, to safeguard the lives of helpless women and children and aged civilians; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

766. Also, resolution adopted by the St. Patrick's Day parade committee, opposing the lifting of the Spanish embargo; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

767. Also, resolution adopted by New Jersey State Council, Knights of Columbus, opposing the lifting of the Spanish embargo; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

768. By Mr. KEOGH: Petition of 375 citizens of Greater New York, concerning the present Neutrality Act and urging the retention of the same without amendment; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

769. By Mr. KRAMER: Resolution of the Los Angeles Meat and Provision Drivers Union, relating to the Patman bill (H. R. 9464); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

770. Also, resolution of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Los Angeles, relating to the national parks in California, etc.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

771. Also, resolution of the Pasadena Central Labor Union, relating to the deficiency appropriation bill to maintain the Works Progress Administration, etc.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

772. Also, resolution of the Los Angeles Presbyterian Church, relating to the boycotting of German goods, etc.; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED-TO BILLS

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I should like to introduce a bill for appropriate reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Because of the unanimousconsent agreement, it is not in order to introduce bills or transact other business until the call of the calendar has been completed. The clerk will state the first bill on the calendar.

CLAIMS OF AMERICAN CITIZENS AGAINST MEXICO

The bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States on claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico, was announced as first in order, and the Senate proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the principal amounts of all awards in favor of citizens of the United States against the United Mexican States heretofore made by the Commissions established by the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico, and extensions thereof, on claims presented under said convention, plus interest stipulated in any such award and accruing up to the date of such award, and the principal amounts of all appraisals of such claims in favor of citizens of the United States heretofore made by the Commissioners appointed by the United States and Mexico for said purpose pursuant to the protocol of April 24, 1934, and agreed upon in their report, plus interest stipulated in any such appraisal and accruing up to the date of said report, shall be paid immediately by the Government of the United States to the person or persons entitled to the same, and that, appropriations for such payment of all such awards and agreed appraisals, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, be, and hereby are, authorized: Provided, That the Secretary of State shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury all such awards and appraisals and the amounts to be paid on each in conformity with this act, and shall designate the person or persons entitled to receive such payments: Provided further, That, when the person or persons entitled to receive any such payments have received same on any such award or appraisal, such person or persons will be deemed to have consented to all of the provisions of this act, and all of the rights and interests of such person or persons in and to such award or appraisal, and the claim to which it pertains, will be deemed to have been fully satisfied and paid, and said award or appraisal, and the claim to which it pertains, and all of the rights and interests of such person or persons in respect thereto, shall be held to have been assigned to the United States to be enforced by and on behalf of the United States against the United Mexican States: And provided further, That awards and appraisals authorized to be paid by this act shall be included in the final settlement between the Governments of the United States of America and the United Mexican States under the said convention of September 8, 1923; and the payment of any award or appraisal under this act shall not be construed as the satisfaction, in whole or in part, of any such award or appraisal, or as extinguishing or diminishing the liability of the United Mexican States for the satisfaction in full of such awards and appraisals, but shall be considered only as an advance by the United States until all of said awards and appraisals have been paid off and satisfied in full to the United States by the United Mexican States.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President-

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill was thoroughly debated at the last session of the Congress. It was favorably reported by the Foreign Relations Committee, after careful investigation. It provides for the payment of claims that were favorably passed on by joint claims commissions representing the United States and Mexico, no one of which has ever been paid.

The bill provides that these awards are to be paid by the Government of the United States as was contemplated by the original treaty of 1923, the United States having the right under said treaty to reimburse itself from Mexico.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I recall very vividly the discussion which took place last year, and particularly the statement made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], who now occupies the chair. May I ask the Senator from Texas if there have been any changes made in the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. There have been no changes so far as I recall.

Mr. McNARY. I thought an amendment was offered which proposed some changes?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator is correct. There is one amendment which ought to be adopted, an amendment suggested by the Secretary of State. It provides that the Treasury Department, instead of the State Department, shall ascertain and verify the amount of the awards before they shall be paid. I ask that the amendment be stated and adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 12, after the word "appraisals", it is proposed to strike out the word "and" and insert a comma and the words "whereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine", so as to read:

Provided, That the Secretary of State shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury all such awards and appraisals, whereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine the amounts to be paid on each in conformity with this act, and shall designate the person or persons entitled to receive such payments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I will have to ask that this bill go over. It seems to me it is too important and, in my judgment, too controversial, to be acted on while the unanimous-consent calendar is being called. The matter involved was discussed at the last session and a similar bill was then passed after considerable debate. My judgment is that it is a bill that ought not to be passed; I think the principle involved is bad; at least I think the measure ought to be discussed at a time when it can be gone into a little more fully than it can be considered this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore: Does the Senator object to having the amendment pending?

Mr. ADAMS. No, sir; I merely object to the passage of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator permit the adoption of the perfecting amendment which I have offered?

Mr. ADAMS. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas is agreed to, and, without objection, the bill goes over.

PYRAMID LAKE INDIAN RESERVATION, NEV.

The bill (S. 92) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for certain lands to certain settlers in the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, Nev., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patents for certain lands entered pursuant to section 1 of the act of June 7, 1924, entitled "An act for the relief of settlers and town-site occupants of certain lands in the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, Nev." upon the payment of unpaid balances based upon reappraisals made in 1934 as follows: J. A. Ceresola, $4,595.89; W. J. Ceresola, $4,376.11; Domenico Ceresola, $4,926.63; M. P. Depaoli, $4,878.56; and the Garaventa Land & Livestock Co., $2,951.51: Provided, That the foregoing amounts, together with interest at 3½ percent per annum from date of reappraisals made in 1934, shall be paid within 90 days from the date of the passage and approval of this act: And provided further, That in the case of the death of any of the entrymen, payments may be received from and patents be issued to the heirs or legal successors of the entrymen herein named.

SPECIAL JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 38) providing additional funds for the expenses of the Special Joint Congressional Committee Investigating the Tennessee Valley Authority, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the limit of expenditures under the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution creating a special joint congressional committee to make an investigation of the Tennessee Valley Authority," approved April 4, 1938, is hereby increased by the sum of $25,000, such additional sum to be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the special joint congressional committee created by such joint resolution. The final report of such committee shall be made on or before April 1, 1939, but the chairman of the committee is authorized to continue such clerical help as found necessary for the indexing, proofreading, filing, and distribution of the report.

MRS. GUY A. M'CONOHA

The bill (S. 760) for the relief of Mrs. Guy A. McConoha was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Guy A. McConoha, of Poplar, Mont., the sum of $425.50 in full satisfaction of all claims of such Mrs. Guy A. McConoha against the United States resulting from the loss sustained by her when dispossessed by the Government of a certain Ford automobile purchased with a like sum by the said Mrs. Guy A. McConoha, such automobile, without her knowledge, having been previously forfeited to the United States under the internal-revenue laws and laws relating to the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among the Indians: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 117) for the relief of Lulu M. Peiper was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An explanation is requested. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Maloney], who introduced the bill, is not present.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

LESTER P. BARLOW

The bill (S. 313) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Lester P. Barlow against the United States was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lester P. Barlow the sum of $592,719.21, in full settlement of his aerial torpedo patent-infringement claim against the United States as found by the Court of Claims to be due him in its decision of June 7, 1937: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

L. L. STOKES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 342) for the relief of L. L. Stokes, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the words "That the", to strike out "Postmaster General" and insert "Comptroller General of the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of L. L. Stokes, former postmaster at Mountainburg, Ark., in the sum of $118.56, due the United States on account of public funds lost in the burglary of the post office on November 12, 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIERKS LUMBER & COAL CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 60) for the relief of Dierks Lumber & Coal Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Dierks Lumber & Coal Co., of Kansas City, Mo., the sum of $12,062.27, in full satisfaction of all its claims against the United States arising out of a contract for the sale of timber in the Ouachita National Forest by the United States to a predecessor corporation of such Dierks Lumber & Coal Co., such contract having been entered into between the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture and such predecessor corporation on December 6, 1929: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri explain the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, this is a case in which a predecessor company of the Dierks Lumber & Coal Co. contracted to purchase from the Government certain timber on the Ouachita National Forest. The company was unable to find a market for the product and was forced to suspend operations after it had actually purchased from the Government a much less quantity of timber than was covered by the amount of its deposit. The contract was subsequently canceled by the Agricultural Department at the request of the company; but the Comptroller General, in a very technical decision, held that the company was not entitled to a refund simply because the cancelation of the contract was a day or two after the expiration of the contract.

The enactment of the bill has been twice recommended by the Committee on Claims, and I think there is no opposition to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did the Department recommend it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Department recommends it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN MULHERN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 13) for the relief of John Mulhern, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Mulhern, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $202, as full compensation for a gasoline tank, gasoline pump, and 105 gallons of gasoline, destroyed on March 11, 1934, by fire caused by pupils of the Truxton Canon Indian School, Valentine, Ariz.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MANUEL D. A. OTERO, ADMINISTRATOR

The bill (S. 218) for the relief of Manuel D. A. Otero, as administrator of the estate of Teresita S. Otero, deceased, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Manuel D. A. Otero, as administrator of the estate of Teresita S. Otero, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, the sum of $255.44. Such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of the death of the said Teresita S. Otero, resulting from personal injuries received on the 16th day of January 1935, on United States Highway No. 60, between Willard and Mountainair, N. Mex., while riding in an automobile which collided with an improperly parked Government truck, attached to Civilian Conservation Corps Camp F-35-N, located about 3 miles southwest from Manzano, in Torrance County, N. Mex.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

EMMA GOMEZ

The bill (S. 219) for the relief of Emma Gomez was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Emma Gomez, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, the sum of $500. Such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of damages for personal injuries sustained by the said Emma Gomez on the 16th day of January 1935, on United States Highway No. 60, between Willard and Mountainair, N. Mex., while riding in an automobile which collided with an improperly parked Government truck, attached to Civilian Conservation Corps Camp F-35-N, located about 3 miles southwest from Manzano, in Torrance County, N. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

LESLIE TRUAX

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 87) for the relief of Leslie Truax, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Leslie Truax the sum of $1,000 in full settlement of any and all claims against the United States for injuries sustained on July 9, 1935, while a member of Battery A of the Citizens' Military Training Corps, at Fort Snelling, Minn.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

E. C. BEAVER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 323) for the relief of E. C. Beaver, who suffered loss on account of the Lawton, Okla., fire, 1917, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,502 to E. C. Beaver as compensation in full for loss of property destroyed by the fire on September 24, 1917, in the city of Lawton, Okla., such loss having been the result of the inability of the fire department of the city of Lawton to control said fire because of lack of water, all available water for fire-fighting purposes having been appropriated and being used by the War Department in connection with the training of soldiers at Fort Sill and Camp Doniphan: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma explain the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I think this is the last of a series of similar claims bills that have been before the Senate. Heretofore all the others have been passed, and this one, I think, is the last.

This damage occurred in 1917, at a time when Camp Donovan was located at Fort Sill. The city of Lawton gave the War Department the full benefit of its water system, and during the time when the Fort Sill authorities had control of the water system a fire broke out in the city of Lawton. The water was supposed to be diverted to the city in times of fire, but the War Department neglected to keep someone at a certain valve to turn the water to the city, so, because of the fact that no water could be had to put out the fire, this damage occurred.

I think the Congress has passed probably 15 or 20 similar bills, and, as I have said, this is the last one of them. The precedent has been set for the past several years, so I take it there can be no real objection to this bill. It is exactly in line with the former bills heretofore passed by the Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALICE MINNICK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 470) for the relief of Alice Minnick, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$360" and insert "$336.30", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Alice Minnick, of Washington, D. C., the sum of $336.30 in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for reimbursement of medical and hospital expenses paid by her as a result of injuries received when she slipped and fell on wet steps inside the old Interior Department Building at Eighteenth and F Streets NW., Washington, D. C., on January 15, 1937: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to, or received by, any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with such claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with such claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOULA BREWING CO.

The bill (S. 766) for the relief of the Missoula Brewing Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to the Missoula Brewing Co., of Missoula, Mont., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,250, representing the amount paid for 10 fermented malt liquor stamps of the 25-barrel denomination which were lost in the mail prior to their receipt by the said company: Provided, That the Missoula Brewing Co. shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in a penal sum of double the amount paid for such stamps, in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the stamps herein described: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed gullty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

MABEL FOOTE RAMSEY

The bill (S. 532) for the relief of Mabel Foote Ramsey, widow of William R. Ramsey, Jr., late special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Mabel Foote Ramsey, widow of William R. Ramsey, Jr., a special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, who was killed near Danville, Ill., on May 3, 1938, in the line of his official duty: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

STATUE OF THE LATE WILL ROGERS

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 1) authorizing the holding of ceremonies in the rotunda in connection with the presentation of a statue of the late Will Rogers was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Will Rogers Memorial Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized to place temporarily in the rotunda of the Capitol a statue of the late Will Rogers, of Oklahoma, and to hold ceremonies in the rotunda on said occasion; and that the Architect of the Capitol be, and he is hereby, authorized to make the necessary arrangements therefor.

CODIFICATION OF INTERNAL REVENUE LAWS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2762) to consolidate and codify the internal-revenue laws of the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance, without amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this codification of the internal-revenue laws has been made over a period of 10 or more years by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. In the work of the committee the Treasury Department has assisted and participated. The legal staff of the Treasury Department has gone over this code with a great deal of care, and the Under Secretary of the Treasury has urged the adoption of the code as absolute law. In addition, the Department of Justice has scrutinized and has participated in the preparation of the code, particularly the parts of it relating to procedure having to do with litigated tax matters. The work has progressed over a period of 10 years or more, as I have stated, and the enacting statute has been passed by the House with but few dissenting votes.

It is proper to say that there has been no codification of the Federal laws as absolute law since the Revised Statutes of 1873. There was a perfected Revised Statute of 1878, and that may be considered as absolute law, though it was not so enacted by the Congress. Title 35 of the Revised Statutes of 1873 contains the internal-revenue laws. Since that time there has been no codification of the revenue laws or of other Federal statutes as absolute law. There have been various compilations, but these have been only prima facie evidence of the law.

This code has been prepared with a great deal of care. It purports and is intended to cover all the law of a general and permanent character relating exclusively to internal revenue in force on January 2, 1939, and all temporary tax laws, as well, relating exclusively to internal revenue.

The code makes no changes in existing law. That is to say, it is not intended to change existing law by the enactment of the code. The enacting statute does make the code absolute law rather than prima facie evidence of the internal-revenue laws of the United States.

The code is prospective only. It does not relate to pending cases or suits, and it operates only in the future. It repeals only those laws and parts of laws which are compiled or contained in the code itself; so that if, through inadvertence, any particular revenue act passed by the Congress has been overlooked by the codifiers, that act will not be affected by the adoption of this code, and it is not intended that it should be affected. But if the act or parts of the act are included in the code—that is, if parts of a general revenue law, or the law itself, are included in the code—then, of course, the adoption of the code will repeal the original preexisting act.

This code will give a new point of departure. It will give a new beginning point, and hereafter in tax bills it will not be necessary to repeat a vast amount of matter that is not in controversy, but the code itself may be amended by mere reference to the section.

It also will be of great saving to the courts as well as to the officers of the court in that the code will be taken as absolute law, and it will be unnecessary to go back to the original act.

I call attention especially to the fact that in 1930 the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation prepared a code of the internal-revenue laws of the United States of force on December 1, 1930. That code was adopted as a substitute for title 26 of the Code of the United States. In 1933 there was a new compilation of the revenue laws of the United States, and this new compilation took the place of title 26 of the Code of the United States. Again, in 1938, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation prepared a new compilation or code of the internal-revenue laws of the United States, in force at the beginning of 1938, and that code was adopted merely as prima facie law. No codification of the internal-revenue law of the United States has been adopted as absolute law since the adoption of the Revised Statutes in 1873.

It is believed that this proposed act is comprehensive and that the work has been faithfully done, and that it does include all of the internal-revenue laws of the United States of a general and permanent character of force January 2, 1939. The code is made effective on the 2d day of January 1939 and, as I have already said, is prospective only and is not retroactive in any respect. In other words, any incometax matter which arose prior to or on the 31st day of December 1938 would be governed and controlled by the applicable law in existence on and before December 31, 1938. Any estate-tax matter would come within the code only if the decedent died after the enactment of the code. Gift taxes are likewise dealt with; also the special taxes, such as the excise taxes, or the so-called nuisance taxes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask the Senator from Georgia whether in making this codification there have been any major changes in the substance of the internal revenue laws?

Mr. GEORGE. None; that is to say, there has been no purpose or intent to change in any material respect any of the internal revenue laws of the country.

Mr. AUSTIN. I observe that the provision in section 7 on page 2 of the codification fixes a date of termination, namely, January 2, 1939, after which what is herein set forth will be modified by any act hereafter passed. Is that the Senator's interpretation?

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct. Any act passed after January 2, 1939, will, of course, be construed as modifying or changing any conflicting provision in the code.

Mr. President, I may say that it is of the utmost importance, as the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, the Department of Justice, and the Treasury conceive, that the code be adopted as absolute law and the enacting clause makes it so. There can be no serious danger of omission or material change in the existing law arising through mistake or inadvertence, because we deal constantly with the internalrevenue laws. As every Senator knows, we pass a tax act practically every year, and any mistake can be readily discovered and corrected. It will, of course, permit a new point of departure for the convenience of the courts, and the Congress itself in enacting new revenue acts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire whether, by the procedural provisions in the new code, cases will be affected which are now in process of litigation, or prospective litigation, dealing with taxes, or the adjustment of claims made by the Treasury Department.

Mr. GEORGE. It will not apply to any pending suit or cause or controversy; it applies only prospectively.

Mr. KING. Even though the case is inchoate, rather than in esse?

Mr. GEORGE. Any case hereafter brought would probably be affected by the mere procedural provisions of the act, but no case now pending, no controversy which actually has arisen will be affected.

Mr. KING. Suppose under the present law the Government has no valid claim against A, but under the new codification possibly might have a right to litigate in the courts, and should initiate proceedings. Could the defendant in such a case rely upon the procedural form which now exists, or would he be deprived of all such benefits?

Mr. GEORGE. If it were a case which arose under some prior revenue law, which, of course, would necessarily be the case at this time, or would likely be, then the applicable provisions of the law existing at the time, and under which the alleged cause of action arose, would apply, and not the code, as I construe it. All existing rights and liabilities are preserved, as I understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill. The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OPERATION OF MOTOR VEHICLES

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I am compelled to leave the Chamber for a few moments, I have spoken to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] with respect to order of business No. 22, Senate bill 25, and have requested that it may go over, and he has consented that that may be done. So I ask that when that order of business is reached it go over. TRANSPORTATION OF STOLEN ANIMALS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 90) to provide for the punishment of persons transporting stolen animals in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be cited as the National Animal Theft Act.

SEC. 2. When used in this act—

(a) The term "animal" shall include any cattle, hog, sheep, horse,

(b) The term "interstate or foreign commerce" shall (b) The term "interstate or foreign commerce" shall include transportation from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to a foreign country, or from a foreign country to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. Whoever shall transport or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce any animal or the carcass or hide or only part of the express or hide of any animal troughns the same to any part of the careass or hide of any animal, knowing the same to have been stolen, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment of not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 4. Whoever shall receive, conceal, store, barter, buy, sell, or dispose of any such animal, or the careass or hide or any part of the carcass or hide thereof, moving in or constituting a part of inter-state or foreign commerce, knowing the same to have been stolen, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprison-ment of not more than 5 years, or both. Sec. 5. Any person violating section 3 of this act may be prose-cuted in any district from, into, or through which such animal, or the carcass or hide or any part of the carcass or hide thereof, has been transported or removed. LXXXIV--67

SEC. 6. Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal, modify, or amend any part of the National Stolen Property Act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am favorable to the enactment of the bill, but I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] whether, in his judgment, it might not be worth while for the Congress to consider, some of these days, the advisability of enacting a general law with reference to the transportation of stolen property across State lines. We have heretofore made it unlawful to transport stolen automobiles across State lines, and now it is proposed that we make it unlawful to transport stolen animals. What is there about these particular types of property which requires that we deal with them separately, and not pass a general statute making it unlawful to transport any kind of stolen property across State lines?

I can understand that in the case of an automobile it is easy to get beyond the State jurisdiction, and it may be that by the use of the automobile or the train it is easy to get cattle beyond the jurisdiction of the State in which they are stolen. There are probably other types of property which possess the same facility for rapid transportation into another State. What is the Senator's reaction to the advisability of the passage of a law punishing the transportation of all stolen property across State lines?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the Senator is no doubt in part right, but we are confronted with an unusual situation at the present time. We have been building highspeed roads and trails into that territory which has been the grazing section of the country, and we find that advantage is taken of the facilities afforded by the Government itself; namely, high-speed roads and the like, so that those inclined to embark on the stealing of cattle may go into the open domain and the open range and load on a vehicle four or five or a dozen head of cattle, and are across the State line overnight, before morning comes.

The loss has been so great that it is now continually complained of as one of the greatest sources of loss to the cattlemen and stock grazers in the western section at the present time. Hence, whatever merit there may be in the Senator's thought, I respectfully suggest that at this time it is urgent that a bill such as that before us should be passed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was not intimating that I would object to the pending bill; I think perhaps the situation justifies it; but I think that if we are to be asked to make it unlawful to transport stolen goods of various kinds across State lines, we ought to give consideration to the enactment of a general law on the subject.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to see that done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FALSE CLAIMS FOR LOSS OF INSURED MAIL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 185) to amend section 224 of the Criminal Code so as to penalize the making of false claims for the loss of insured mail matter, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, line 10, after the word "both," to insert a comma and the words "except in cases where the amount of such claim or application for indemnity is less than $100 there may be imposed a fine only," so as to make the bill read:

only," so as to make the bill read:

Be ti enacted, etc., That section 224 of the Criminal Code (35 Stat. 1133; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 354) be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 224. Whoever shall make, allege, or present, or cause to be made, alleged, or presented, or assist, aid, or abet in making, alleging, or presenting, any claim or application for indemnity for the loss of any registered or insured letter, parcel, package, or other article or matter, or the contents thereof, knowing such claim or application to be false, fictitious, or fraudulent; or whoever for the purpose of obtaining or aiding to obtain the payment or approval of any such claim or application, shall make or use, or cause to be made or used, any false statement, certificate, affidavit, or deposition; or whoever shall knowingly and willfully misrepresent, or misstate, or, for the purpose aforesaid, shall knowingly and willfully conceal any material fact or circumstance in respect of any such claim or application for indemnity, shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both, except in cases where the amount of such claim or application for indemnity is less than $100 there may be imposed a fine only."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 25) prohibiting the operation of motor vehicles in interstate commerce by unlicensed operators was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is the bill which the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] asked to have go over, and the bill will be passed over.

TERM OF SERVICE OF FORMER SENATOR GEORGE L. BERRY

The resolution (S. Res. 73) relative to the term of service of former Senator George L. Berry, of Tennessee, was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the term of service of George L. Berry, appointed a Senator by the Governor of the State of Tennessee on May 6, 1937, to fill the vacancy in the term ending January 2, 1943, caused by the death of Nathan L. Bachman, expired on November 8, 1938, the day on which his successor, Tom Stewart, was duly elected to fill the unexpired term of the said Nathan L. Bachman; be it Resolved, That said George L. Berry is not entitled to receive compensation as Senator or any of the emoluments of the office from and after the said 8th day of November 1938.

Mr. AUSTIN subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask that the vote by which Senate Resolution 73 was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee or the Senator from Texas if he will not explain the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally] reported the resolution, and I know he can explain it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if Senators will turn to the RECORD of yesterday, page 990, they will find a complete transcript of the hearings before the committee and a very clear outline of what were the issues presented before the committee. A former Senator, George L. Berry, filed a petition with the Senate asking that he be given compensation until the day his successor, Senator STEWART, qualified and took his seat. It will be remembered that upon the death of Senator Bachman, the Governor of Tennessee, acting under authority of the State statute, appointed George L. Berry to fill the unexpired term. Under the law of Tennessee a general election was called to elect a successor to Senator Bachman, and in that election on the 8th of November, Mr. STEWART was elected. Senator STEWART, however, did not appear in the Senate and take the oath until January 16. The contention of Senator Berry was that he was entitled to compensation until that date. At the request of the subcommittee the Legislative Counsel prepared a very exhaustive brief, which appears in the RECORD.

The conclusions of the committee were that Senator Berry was entitled to compensation only until his successor was elected and that what becomes of the money, whether it lapses to the Treasury or whether it goes to Senator STEWART, is not in issue here.

I will state the reasons for the committee's conclusions. The seventeenth amendment is quoted in the Congressional RECORD in part as follows:

When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointment-

For what time?-

until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

Our construction of that constitutional provision was that the Governor was authorized to appoint a Senator only until the successor was elected. The language of the seventeenth amendment is:

When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.

The contention of Senator Berry was that there exists a statute of the State of Tennessee which provides for the election of the successor. Of course, under the seventeenth amendment, the State has a right to regulate the election of the successor. Senator Berry contended that that statute provided that the person so elected should serve until his successor qualified. We held that that statute was of no force because of the fact that, according to our view, it was plainly in conflict with the provisions of the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield. Mr. HATCH. In brief, it was the opinion of the committee that the tenure of office of a Senator appointed under the circumstances that Senator Berry was, ends on the election date.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. HATCH. And therefore his right to compensation ends with the termination of his office.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. HATCH. Is it not true that this same question has arisen on previous occasions, not before the Senate as a body, but before the disbursing officials of the Senate, since the adoption of the seventeenth amendment, and that the conclusion reached by the committee is in line with the constant practice of this body ever since the adoption of the seventeenth amendment?

Mr. CONNALLY. In answer to the first part of the Senator's question I will say "yes." As to the latter part of his question, I am not prepared to agree 100 percent, for the reason that there was some conflicting legislation passed, if the Senator will recall, from time to time, about the pay of Senators under those circumstances.

Mr. HATCH. That is, special acts.

Mr. CONNALLY. Acts of Congress.

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I was going to refer to that matter.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator is going to refer to that I shall not interrupt him.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not mind interruptions on the part of the Senator from New Mexico. The Senator usually illuminates whenever he interrupts.

Mr. President, aside from the constitutional provision, Congress has legislated on the question of compensation. The last act passed was in 1935. It provided that the compensation of the person elected should become effective on the day following the election. So in this case the committee finds it to be absolutely conclusive, both from the constitutional standpoint and from the act of the Congress itself, that the person so appointed is entitled to compensation only up to and including the day of the election, and that thereafter, the question whether the pay goes back to the Treasury or whether it goes to the Senator elected is an immaterial one in this inquiry, because the petition was simply for the allowance of the compensation.

Having those views, Mr. President, the committee presents a resolution expressing the approval of the Senate of the action of the committee. There was no controversy either in the subcommittee or in the full committee with reference to these legal conclusions.

I shall be glad to yield for any question.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, in view of the explanation made by the Senator from Texas, I have no objection to the present consideration of the resolution or its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, at the conclusion of the remarks which I made a moment ago on the Berry resolution, that there be printed in the Record a letter from Senator Tom Stewart disavowing any claim for salary until the day of his taking the oath as a Member of the Senate.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> UNITED STATES SENATE Washington, January 30, 1939.

Mr. C. F. PACE,

Senate Disbursing Officer,
The Capitol, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I desire my name to be placed on the pay roll as a Member of the United States Senate, beginning on the day I was sworn in, January 16, 1939. I make no claim to pay previous to Thanking you very much, I am, Sincerely yours,

TOM STEWART.

MOTOR CARRIER TRANSPORTATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 167) to amend clause (4b) of subsection (b) of section 203 of the Motor Carrier Act, 1935, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "associations", to insert "if such federation possesses no greater powers or purposes than cooperative associations so defined", so as to make the bill

Be it enacted, etc., That clause (4b) of subsection (b) of section 203 of the Motor Carrier Act, 1935, is amended by inserting after the word "amended" a comma and the following: "or by a federation of such cooperative associations if such federation possesses no greater powers or purposes than cooperative associations so defined."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPARABLE COST OF POWER PLANTS ON PASSAMAQUODDY PROJECT

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 62) calling for further information from the Federal Power Commission concerning the comparable costs of steam and tidal-generated plants on the Passamaquoddy project, which was read as follows:

Whereas the Federal Power Commission reported on January 3, 1934, that the tidal power project at Passamaquoddy was unsound and unjustified (1) because it will cost approximately $40,000,000 while a comparable steam-generating plant would cost only $16,000,000; (2) because the steam-electric power would be cheaper at the higher-load factors; (3) because Passamaquoddy power could not compete with steam-power rates in export; (4) and because there is no present or prospective market for Passamaquoddy power at any price; and power at any price; and
Whereas the Congress has been asked resume its consideration of the Passamaquoddy project: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Power Commission is requested to review its previous reports upon this project and bring them down to date; and to report to the Senate as soon as possible (1) the relative costs of steam-generated or tidal-generated power plants at Passamaquoddy; (2) the relative costs of power to the consumer; and (3) whether there is either a local or export market for power thus generated by either method.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, this resolution, and the joint resolution following, which was introduced by the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], represent an agreement in procedure between both the friends and the critics of the socalled Passamaguoddy tidal power project. The resolution now under discussion seeks to bring the reports of the Federal Power Commission down to date. The subsequent joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Maine requires the essential information from the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors regarding the cost and the advisability of the project. Neither resolution is a commitment to anything with respect to the project. Both resolutions merely are exploratory, for the purpose of seeking information, and the Committee on Commerce is unanimously in favor of the adoption of both resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

COMPLETION OF SURVEYS, ETC., PASSAMAQUODDY BAY

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 57) authorizing the Secretary of War to cause a completion of surveys, test borings, and foundation investigations to be made to determine the advisability and cost of putting in a small experimental plant for development of tidal power in the waters in and about Passamaquoddy Bay, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such examinations was announced as next in order.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I ask that Senate Joint Resolution 57 go over.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection and let me make a very brief statement?

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. It seems to me, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and in view of the facts involved, that it is not quite fair to have one of these resolutions agreed to without agreement on the part of the Senate in the other. The resolution presented by the Senator from Michigan calls on the Federal Power Commission for current information. The joint resolution which the Senator from Iowa has asked to go over calls upon the Board of Engineers or the Secretary of War for information. The Board of Engineers has made exhaustive studies of the project in the past. The President has now recommended an appropriation for the purpose of completing borings and providing a small experimental plant. I appreciate that it would perhaps have been more appropriate for some Senator on the other side of the aisle to have introduced the joint resolution to carry out the desires and recommendations of the President.

The joint resolution seeks to give authority for the completion of the borings and the investigations and a report to the Congress as to the advisability of proceeding further. Senators recognize that the appropriation suggested by the President could not be made without some prior authority upon which such an appropriation could rest, and all my joint resolution seeks to do is to lay the foundation for an appropriation for the limited purposes suggested, which will have to come before the Senate hereafter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the same engineers have charge of the work if it should be undertaken?

Mr. WHITE. Does the Senator mean in charge of the borings?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; will they have charge of the building of the necessary dams, and so forth?

Mr. WHITE. If I may say so, that will be entirely within the jurisdiction of the Congress. The Congress may determine when it gets this report that it will take no further steps in the matter whatsoever, or it may determine that it is wise to meet the President's desire for the building of a small experimental station. It may do either of those two things, but in either event the determination as to whether to go on beyond what is asked by this joint resolution is wholly within the hands of the Congress itself.

I again emphasize that the joint resolution simply carries out, so far as we can do so at this time, the recommendation of the President, made to the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House and the Commerce Committee of the Senate. In view of the adoption of the other resolution, calling upon the Federal Power Commission for information, I feel that it is proper that information of the character suggested in this resolution should be had from the Board of Engineers.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is always a matter of regret to me to be compelled to differ with my able friend from Maine. However, I desire to look into this matter; and I ask that the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

That concludes the calendar.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of J. Leslie Ford, of Delaware (now serving under a recess appointment), to be United States marshal for the district of Delaware.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Floyd H. Roberts to be United States district judge for the western district of Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This nomination has been adversely reported.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nomination be passed over. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky asks that the nomination of Mr. Roberts be passed over. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Jewell W. Swofford to be a member of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the Executive Calendar.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I understand that a number of Senators wish to introduce bills and present other routine business. I therefore move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

DELEGATION OF QUASI-JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS BY SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture explaining the need for the enactment of legislation authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture, on occasion, to delegate to employees of the Department of Agriculture the function of issuing or promulgating certain orders which may have the force and effect of law and which may be issued or promulgated only after notice and hearing, or opportunity for hearing, have been given to persons affected by or interested in such orders, which with the accompanying list of statutory provisions requiring or authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to exercise quasi-judicial functions, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

TRANSFER OF UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE RECORDS, ETC., TO STATES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide for the transfer of United States Employment Service records, files, and property in local offices to the States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORT OF FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, copy of the Eighteenth Annual Report of the Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1938, with additional activities to December 1938, together with a statement showing the names, titles, and compensation of the members and employees of the Federal Power Commission, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ALIENS UNDER NATIONAL POWER POLICY COMMITTEE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Executive Assistant to the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, responding to Senate Resolution 285, agreed to June 8, 1938, stating "that the salaries of the employees of the National Power Policy Committee are paid from P. W. A. administrative funds and therefore were covered by the report contained in Administrator Ickes' letter of January 14 to the President of the Senate, advising that no aliens were employed by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works," which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 24

Concurrent resolution urging the establishment of a division of cooperatives in the Department of Agriculture

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):

Whereas the establishment and maintenance of cooperative organizations is of vital importance to the Nation and affords a com-mendable solution of the serious problems involving the farmers, workers, and consumers; and

Whereas there is no Government agency dedicated to the principles of cooperation and pledged to the upbuilding of the cooperative movement, the present status being as follows:

In the Department of Agriculture the former Division of Cooperative Marketing has been shifted, first, to the Federal Farm Board, and thence to the Farm Credit Administration, performing certain services for farmers' producing and marketing cooperatives; the Consumers' Counsel Division of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration rendering assistance to consumers' cooperatives by supplying them with information and reporting progress in The Consumers' Guide; and

In the Department of Labor the Bureau of Labor Statistics conducts surveys of consumers' cooperatives and issues publications on

Whereas it is highly desirable to coordinate the work in cooperative buying and selling done in the several Government agencies and to strengthen it in such a way that it will provide the maximum of service to farmers, workers, and consumers: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring). That we petition and urge the Congress of the United States to enact legislation and make the necessary appropriations to create and establish a division of cooperatives in the Department of Agriculture, having for its purpose the assembling, compiling, and maintaining of files of statistical data relating to the accomplishments of cooperative enterprises, the statutes of Congress, of the several States and foreign countries affecting cooperatives, together with the coordinating of all duties and responsibilities toward cooperatives now reposed in the various agencies of Government, all to be used for the benefit and use of agencies of Government, all to be used for the benefit and use of established cooperatives and new projects in process of organiza-tion, and further providing for the appointment of a director, whose duty it shall be to render all personal and other assistance possible such cooperatives; to make appropriations therefor; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is instructed and directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Members of Congress of this State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

A resolution requesting the President of the United States to with-draw the nomination of Thomas R. Amlie to a position on the Interstate Commerce Commission

Whereas Thomas R. Amlie has spent his life as a communistic agitator against everything in the American Government, its Constitution, and its laws; and
Whereas Thomas R. Amlie is one of that small coterie of congressional Representatives who joined in a message of sympathy to the "red" government of Spain and its murder of thousands of priests hishors aways and prophers of visitious evidence of the state priests, bishops, nuns, and members of religious orders; and

Whereas the prejudiced attitude of this man to everything held sacred in the minds of American citizens unfits him for membership in any quasi-judicial body: Therefore be it

Resolved. That we appeal to the President of the United States to withdraw the nomination of Thomas R. Amlie to a position on the Interstate Commerce Commission; and be it further Resolved, That if this name is not withdrawn, we appeal to the Members of the United States Senate to withhold confirmation of this appointment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate petitions of several citizens of Los Angeles, Calif., praying for the allotment of sufficient funds to continue the investigation of the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor pertaining to the violation of civil liberties, etc., which were referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a memorial from Local Union, No. 1571, United Mine Workers of America, of Tamaqua, Pa., remonstrating against any change in the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by J. L. Parish Division, No. 556, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, in the State of Missouri, protesting against the enactment of legislation to regulate the mileage of trainservice employees, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the council of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the observance of National Inventors' Day and National Advancement Week, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted by the Holyoke Taxpayers' Association, of Holyoke, Mass., favoring the balancing of the Budget, and that this end be accomplished by retrenchment rather than by further taxation, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GUFFEY presented petitions, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of Bethlehem, Pa., praying that the United States adhere to the general policy of neutrality as enunciated by existing law, and also extend the law so as to include civil as well as international conflicts, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. REED presented a petition of 69 citizens of Atchison. Kans., praying for the enactment of the so-called Patman bill, imposing taxes upon chain stores, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of 191 citizens of Stafford, Kans., praying that the United States stop the shipment of arms and munitions to Japan, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Buffalo, Kans., praying for the enactment of general welfare legislation providing old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Sterling, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Young People's Religious Union of the Unitarian Church, of Westwood, Mass., favoring the enactment of legislation to prevent and punish the crime of lynching, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mrs. CARAWAY presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

LABELING OF WOOL PRODUCTS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, treated as a memorial, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce a letter from Francis Willey & Co., top makers, of Boston, Mass.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> FRANCIS WILLEY & Co. (Division of Winslow Bros. & Smith Co.), Boston, Mass., January 18, 1939.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.
Sir: We would like to protest vigorously some features of a bill known as S. 162, which we understand was introduced by Senator

Schwartz on January 4, 1939, and has been referred now to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. We believe that a similar bill has been introduced in the House known as H. R. 944. This bill has to do with the labeling of wool products.

We are wool top makers, which means that we buy raw wool in the West or from the wool dealers, most of whom are located in Boston—sort the wool, scour it, card it, and comb it, and sell the product known as tops to the worsted spinners. Our business, according to our interpretation, has been since 1898, or thereabouts, the selling of wool tops, which we have always considered we made of 100 percent virgin wool.

Under this new bill, however, the product which we have always made would not be considered virgin wool, and in selling our product we would have to describe as part virgin wool and part reclaimed wool. In other words, we would have to declare our product as an inferior article because of the description given in this bill as to what is reclaimed wool, when as a matter of fact this is not in any way the case.

On page 2, article D, reclaimed wool is defined as including wool waste, and article F describes such wool waste. In article F the following items are described as waste, when in point of fact they are virgin wool and cannot be considered as anything else.

tem No. 1, card waste: This is simply the wool that is left in the worsted card and which drops out of the card while the wool is going through this machine. It is the very same wool as the original wool from which it came. The common practice in our industry is to dust this wool, thereby removing the dirt from it as it accumulates and put the clean product right back with the wool from which it came. which it came.

Item No. 2, oily waste: If any of the virgin wool going through any of the machinery becomes stained in any way with oil, under this act it is considered as waste. As a matter of fact, the common practice is to take such wool and put it back with the wool from which it came in the scouring bowls.

Item No. 3, card stripping: Everything we have said applying to card waste applies to card stripping: Everything we have said applying to that is left in the cards. When a given lot is finished running the common practice is to remove the dirt from the card strips and use them again in the next lot of similar grade which is processed.

Item No. 4, paint wool: This, of course, is nothing but the original virgin wool on which the growers have marked brand marks with paint. There are several methods of removing this paint with which the knowing manufacturer is familiar, and it can be so treated that the wool can be processed along with the other virgin wool without making an inferior product.

As you can readily see, under this act, if a piece of wool fell out of the processing machinery onto the floor, which happens on all of the machinery through which the wool passes, it is immediately considered as wool waste, and if it is put back in the wool from which it came, the product must then be labeled as an inferior product.

We would also like to ask a question. If these several items mentioned, which are certainly virgin wool, are to be considered as wool waste, and declared as reclaimed wool, why is not the noil, which is waste, and declared as reclaimed wool, why is not the holl, which is a byproduct of the comb, also considered as wool waste? Noils are the short fibers which are taken out of the wool by the worsted comb. They come out in very much larger percentage than any of the so-called wool wastes mentioned above. They are too short in fiber to put back into the wool again because they would simply come out as noils when these wools reached the comb. They are one of the main raw materials of the woolen industry. We do not feel ourselves that noils should be considered as waste, but we certainly feel that this should be the case if other better fibers which tainly feel that this should be the case if other better fibers which come out in preceding processes of manufacture are going to be considered as waste.

This bill, we understand, has had considerable support from the wool grower, who does not realize that if it becomes effective as it is now written it will eventually mean he will take a lower price for his wool. In this country the wool and worsted industry is working behind a tariff wool, and the price of a fabric means the price of foreign competition plus the duty. Although this bill states that it is going to prohibit the importation of products which are not properly labeled, it is impossible for us to believe that foreign manufacturers are going to consider such items as we have listed above as waste material in spite of the interpretation put upon them in our law. No possible test has been devised which would show the presence of any of the articles above mentioned. Naturally no test could show them as not virgin wool when actually they are all virgin wool. Therefore foreign fabrics will be imported declared as being made out of 100-percent virgin wool. With these fabrics the fabrics of our manufacturers will have to compete. From the price at which the foreign goods can be imported, which will be the top price our manufacturers can secure, will have to be deducted our manufacturing costs, and in the final analysis, in the long pull, our wool growers will only be able to obtain a price for their wool which will compete in cloth with these foreign fabrics.

If this bill is passed as written, the cost of making worsted tops to be declared as virgin wool tops will be considerably increased. All of the so-called wastes listed above will have to be sold as a byproduct instead of being used in the original grades of wool from which they came. With every mill in this country selling such materials as waste materials the value of such materials will be greatly depreciated. If these wastes become then a substantial byproduct to be sold at the depreciated price, then the cost of making a top to be declared a virgin wool top will be substantially increased. The wool grower will not get more for his wool This bill, we understand, has had considerable support from the wool grower, who does not realize that if it becomes effective as it is because of this bill, because of the fact that the higher manufacturing costs which the bill will impose will simply mean that in order to sell his wool and compete with foreign competition he will take less for his wool.

In this letter we are touching upon only a very narrow part of the effects of this bill itself, but they are the parts that particu-larly affect our business. We are against a bill which definitely misnames in itself an important product in the manufacture of

The great majority of New England woolen and worsted manufacturers, who are our customers, are opposed to the bill on very much broader lines, as it presents many serious difficulties to them.

We would like to go on record only on the subjects mentioned above which will have a direct effect upon us, and upon the industry as a whole all the way back to the grower of wool.

Senator Schwartz, we understand, has stated that he does not consider hearings on this bill necessary in view of the fact that similar bills have been considerably discussed in Washington before. Such bills, however, did not include as reclaimed, reworked wool waste any of the terms we have mentioned. wool waste any of the items we have mentioned. Respectfully yours,

PUBLIC DEFENDERS IN UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I wish to introduce two bills providing for the appointment of public defenders in the Federal district courts. One applies only to the District of Columbia, the other to all United States district courts. The proper defense of indigent persons accused of crime is a necessary counterpart of public prosecution. The State should shield the innocent as well as protect society against the criminal.

Public defense of accused persons long since has passed the experimental stage in this country and is now an accomplished fact in many communities where the office of public defender has been established by legislative enactment or local provision. Among those communities are Los Angeles; Portland, Oreg.; Omaha; New Haven; Hartford; Bridgeport; Minneapolis; Pittsburgh; Memphis; Wilmington, N. C.; Columbus, Ohio; Evansville; Cincinnati; Dallas; Oakland, Calif.; San Francisco; and Temple, Tex. The comments of judges, district attorneys, and lawyers in these cities, notably in Los Angeles, where the office has been in operation for over 10 years, are most favorable.

Recent developments in aid of the public-defender movement have been significant and indicate that the public defender is likely to become a part of our system of criminal law in the near future.

The criminal law must be so amended that the poor and helpless defendant shall be accorded the same adequate defense as is given to the wealthy malefactor. No one should be compelled to suffer because of his race, creed, or purse.

The public defender is a step in the direction toward the democracy of justice, and as such it should appeal to all fair-minded people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will be received and appropriately referred.

The bills introduced by Mr. CAPPER were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. as follows:

S. 1176. A bill to provide for the appointment of a public defender in the District of Columbia; and

S. 1177. A bill to provide for the appointment of a public defender in each United States district court.

MILITARY TRAINING IN CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I introduce a bill which provides for military instruction and training for members of the Civilian Conservation Corps, and I should like to have the privilege of making a statement in connection therewith.

The bill provides in so many words for not less than 2 nor more than 5 hours each week of military training for the members of the Civilian Conservation Corps. In conjunction with my statement relative to the introduction of the bill, I should like to ask permission that there be printed in the RECORD an editorial from the columns of the Washington Daily Times, the date of which I do not have at present. It appears that the editorial entitled "Guns, Bullets, and C. C. C .- Put Them Together" is a reprint of an editorial from the New York Daily News.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times]

Guns, Bullets, and C. C. C.—Put Them Together

The Civilian Conservation Corps was established in 1933, soon after President Roosevelt was first inaugurated.

Its purpose was to take a lot of boys off the streets and out of the freight cars and hobo jungles and give them stimulating work in the open plus plenty of grub and comfortable lodgings. There was no work for them in private industry.

The fiercest enemies of the New Deal have had hardly a word of adverse criticism for the C. C. C. It began achieving its main aims from the start, and it has become possibly our most effective single force for the conservation of human values and natural wealth. The amount of rockbottom conservation work the C. C. C. has done—tree planting and tree doctoring, flood-control dams along the little creeks that feed the big rivers, antierosion projects, etc.—has been enormous and enormously valuable.

The C. C. C. is supervised by United States Army officers.

After the World War the United States Government found itself with about 2,300,000 Lee-Enfield rifles on hand, plus about 900,000 Springfields and about 160,000 Krag-Jorgensens.

Springfields and about 160,000 Krag-Jorgensens.

LOTS OF GUNS STILL AROUND

It has now disposed of all the Krags and about 85,000 Lee-Enfields, and has loaned or sold 295,000 Lee-Enfields to the Philippine Commonwealth. It retains the Springfield rifle as standard Army equipment until such time as the Army can be reequipped with the new Garand semiautomatic rifle. The left-over guns are in good condition.

How much wartime ammunition for these guns the Government has on hand we don't know. But we know it has large amounts of the stuff, and from personal use of this ammunition we know it still performs well.

When the C. C. C. was started, the administration wisely bowed to the objections of organized professional pacifists and ruled against gun instruction for the C. C. C. It couldn't afford to begin against gun instruction for the C. C. C. It couldn't afford to begin as an apparently militaristic administration, though plenty of us, including this newspaper, urged almost from the beginning that the C. C. C. be taught to handle guns as a measure of national defense. Much water has run under the bridge in the 5 years since that time. Our pacifists by and large are now our most bloodthirsty warmongers. They are in a standing rage at Neville Chamberlain for having betrayed the world into peace at Munich, and they are calling for 5,000, 10,000, and up, planes, two or more $100,000,000 battleships, etc.

The administration is encouraging this agitation; partly, we suppose, because Ambassadors Kennedy and Bullitt seem to have stated in secret session with the Senate and House Military Affairs Committees that a European war this year is highly probable, and partly to steam up congressional appropriation fervor.

But the C. C. C. remains as it was. The left-over guns, the left-over ammunition, and the C. C. C. boys have not been put together. This, though gun training for the C. C. C. would give us almost immediately a big nucleus for a wartime force of men who could shoot, and though a News canvass sometime ago showed that most of the C. C. C. boys would like it.

The President at his Tuesday press conference said that he had made his decision against gun training long ago and would let it stand.

STUBBORNNESS OF GREATNESS

The reason is plain human nature. The President is a great and strong-minded man, who rather prides himself on his streak of Dutch stubbornness. Great men, once they have made a decision, tend to feel that they decided rightly and must stick by the decision in spite of chance and change, hell and high water. While we admire the stubbornness of greatness, we would like to point out that our policy as to training C. C. C. boys to shoot is no longer "liberal" or "progressive." It is in reaction against the spirit and needs of the times. If the Government is going to teach the college boys to fly, why in heaven's name shouldn't it teach the C. C. C. boys to shoot?

Chairman Andrew J. May (D., Ky.), of the House Military Affairs boys to shoot?

Chairman Andrew J. May (D., Ky.), of the House Military Affairs Committee, says he will introduce a bill for gun training in the C. C. C. We hope the bill passes.
Incidentally, May also is agitating for a four-lane system of Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf coast military roads. O. K.—and how about widening a lot of our existing roads and edging them with sidewalks? The peacetime uses of these are obvious. Anybody who was in France in the war knows how handy sidewalks would be when infantry, artillery, side cars, and trucks are trying to use the same road.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In connection with the bill which I have introduced, I should like to ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD a few lines in regard to the organization and maintenance of the C. C. C. organizations.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STORY OF THE C. C. C.

The Civilian Conservation Corps was born of an emergency in April 1933. Hundreds of thousands of young men were without employment. Immediate action was vital.

The President recommended and Congress authorized the establishment of the C. C. C. for the purpose of relieving unemployment among youth and of conserving the natural resources of the

A Director was appointed April 5, 1933, and the Departments of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Labor were directed to cooperate.

The Department of Labor, cooperating with State relief and welfare organizations, immediately established agencies for selecting enrollees

The Army made preparations to enroll, transport, feed, clothe, house, and care for the men selected.

The Departments of Interior and Agriculture rushed plans for the location of camps in areas where there was work waiting to be done along carefully planned conservation programs.

The Veterans' Administration took over the task of selecting the

The Veterans' Administration took over the task of selecting the war veterans' quota.

Within less than 4 months one thousand five hundred 200-man C. C. C. camps had been established. These camps were occupied by approximately 300,000 men, who came from every State in the Union and worked on a wide variety of conservation projects.

More than 2,000,000 young men have benefited through the advantages offered in C. C. camps.

The increased self-respect, confidence, and competency of this vast number of young men, together with the work accomplished, attests to the national benefits derived from the C. C. C. program.

WHO CAN ENROLL IN THE C. C. C.?

To be eligible a young man must be—

1. A citizen of the United States.

2. Unemployed and in need of employment.

3. Of good character.

- 4. Between 17 and 23 years of age (until twenty-fourth birthday)
  - Unmarried.
  - Out of school.
     Physically and mentally fit, and able to do vigorous work.

Additional requirements

In order to be selected each applicant must agree to serve at least one full term of 6 months.

He may decide at the end of that period whether he wishes to reenroll for another term.

The maximum term of service is 2 years.

Each man who has one or more dependents must be willing to make an allotment to them of a specified part of his minimum cash allowance of $30 a month. The balance, retained by the enrollee, is judged sufficient to cover his necessary personal expenses in camp.

Further information

In each State an established public-welfare or public-assistance organization serves as the State C. C. C. selecting agency. The local welfare agency or office in turn is responsible in its community for the selection of young men for the C. C. C. A limited number of war veterans are selected by the Veterans' Administration through regional offices.

Unemployed young men, who are interested in the opportunities offered by the C. C. C. (who believe themselves to be eligible) and who have a desire for camp life and work experience, may make further inquiry or application at the nearest local C. C. C. selecting agency. Applications may be made at any time.

THE C. C. C .- A YOUNG MAN'S OPPORTUNITY

To work on jobs which will better equip him to find permanent, useful, and gainful employment.

When hiring new employees, industry, agriculture, and business are looking for men with initiative who can carry out instructions in an alert and competent manner—men with a tested background of job experience.

of job experience.

To meet these practical requirements of the business world is the goal of the educational and job-training program of the C. C. C.

The training and work of the enrollee is carefully supervised by expert technicians, but every encouragement is given to initiative and leadership. Promotions of men showing themselves most capable in these qualities are authorized in every camp.

C. C. C. camps offer more than 150 different types of work. And although no man can be guaranteed that he will be sent to a camp where he can obtain a particular type of work experience, every where he can obtain a particular type of work experience, every camp offers valuable training in the doing of a variety of tasks.

The increasing demand by the business world for C. C. C. trained men is conclusive proof that enrollees are more competent because of camp work and training.

To live in the healthy out-of-doors with a well-equipped camp as a home.

The C. C. cenrollee is given plenty of good, wholesome food. In the winter he is provided with ample blankets and warm clothing. His health is carefully protected. The services of a graduate physician are available to each camp. It is the duty of this physician to look after the physical condition of the enrollee and the sanitary conditions of the camp. The enrollee works in the open under trained supervisors; and 5 years' experience has proved that the physical condition of enrollees, in general, is considerably improved by the wholesome, active life in C. C. camps. He has, in addition, ample leisure in which, within certain restrictions, he may amuse himself or enter into the planned recreational and educational activities offered him under trained recreational and educational activities offered him under trained guidance.

In camp he is in constant association with nearly 200 other young men. This offers him the opportunity to make new friends, to discover new interests, to train his own aptitudes, and to develop the qualities of leadership.

The enrollee is required to meet such regulations as are essential to the orderly functioning of the camp as a whole and the efficient accomplishment of the work engaged in.

Enrollees receive $30 per month, minimum cash allowance.
Some of the jobs in which C. C. how to get ahead.

Millions of acres of forests and parks and farm lands widely distributed throughout the Nation furnish the laboratory in which C. C. C. enrollees gain practical experience and training.

In the conservation of the natural resources of this vast area, the enrollee learns skill, under the mature leadership of trained technicians, which develop his abilities, broaden his interests, and prepare him for useful citizenship.

Living in a 200-man camp, following a daily schedule of camp life, he learns through self-imposed discipline to respect the rights of others, to be tolerant and cooperative, and discovers the Eagerly grasping the opportunity thus offered, the C. C. c. enrollee has built forest-fire protection systems and planted vast forests for the future. He has built roads and trails, dams and terraces. He has made or developed parks that give recreation to millions. He has helped check erosion and demonstrated proper land uses. He has created lakes and ponds, stocked them with fish, and planted refuges for the fast-diminishing wildlife of the country. country.

He has made the Nation conscious of the need for conservation and proved the benefits to be derived from it.

He himself has learned the true meaning of conservation— -for the enrollee sends home a part of his earnings each month, often in this way affording the major protection his family has against need.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, according to my understanding, there are approximately 1,500 C. C. C. camps in the United States. I may add that since the creation of this organization as a result of the suggestion of our very able President in April of 1933, the records show that more than 2,000,000 young men have been provided with the opportunity of helping their dependents and of doing sundry work in various sections of the United States, which has proved extremely beneficial. Particularly in view of the fact that there is a movement on foot for the continuation of the C. C. C. organizations, I hope that the bill which I have introduced will have favorable consideration. I call attention to the fact that yesterday our colleague, the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. Thomas], introduced a bill providing for the continuation of the C. C. C. organizations.

I ask that my bill be referred to the appropriate committee, which I assume to be the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEELY in the chair). The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 1182) to provide for military instruction and training for members of the Civilian Conservation Corps was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WALSH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 2868, the first deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place, under the heading "Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine," insert the following:
"Dutch elm disease eradication: For determining and applying methods of eradication, control, and prevention of spread of the disease of elm trees known as Dutch elm disease, subject to the limitations specified under this head in the Agricultural Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1939, $200,000, to be immediately available and remain available until June 30, 1940."

ADDRESSES BY SENATOR GREEN IN SOUTH AMERICA

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the distinguished junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, visited various South American countries last year. He was received with every courtesy in South America and was accorded receptions by the Senates of Chile, Argentina, and Uruguay. To the Chilean Senate he delivered an admirable address, which was responded to very ably by the President of the Senate of the great state of Chile. The Senator from Rhode Island likewise addressed the Senate of Uruguay, in response to the greeting of the President of that distinguished body. I ask unanimous consent that the addresses referred to, together with other matters incidental to those meetings, be incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RECEPTION OF THE AMERICAN SENATOR, THE HONORABLE MR. GREEN

Mr. Portales (President). You allow me, Mr. Senator? Mr. Green has expressed a desire to have the floor to thank the senate for its greeting.
Your Honor shall have the floor.

I request the consent of the chamber to give the floor to the honorable Senator.

Agreed.

The Honorable Mr. Green has the floor.

of Chile.

the United States of America.

"We realize increasingly that our interests in North America and your interests in South America are largely the same. Furthermore, the turbulent world conditions have impressed upon us the necessity of republics like those existing in South and North America guarding together their common interests.

"We are separated from the rest of the world by two great oceans and are joined together by an isthmus and by links of friendship and sympathy. I am not thinking of business relations only, but also of cultural relations. A few days ago there was established in our Department of State a new division of cultural relations, which may prove rich in results.

"This morning, on a complimentary visit that I paid to the President of Chile, my attention was drawn to the International Labor Conference of 1919, in Washington, where certain social reforms were laid down for all the nations. His Excellency drew my attention to the fact, which I think should be widely known, that Chile has had them all enacted into law. Chile, I believe, is the only nation that has done so; so that the other nations, including ourselves, have much to learn from Chile in that respect.

"The President. The meeting is reopened.
"Mr. Green, gentlemen, in the name of my colleagues of the Senate and in my own name, it gives me special pleasure to greet the eminent political personality of the great American Nation, Senator Green, who honors us with his presence.
"I greet him personally on his high merits, and I also greet in his person the noble body of which he is part, the Senate of the United States, of which one great publicist said that it was a senate of kings, and of which others have said—and we believe—that it is a true Roman senate by reason of the dignity and transcendency of its resolutions; a Senate of the enlightened tradition loved and venerated by all children of free countries and very particularly by us, the citizens of Uruguay. We cannot forget that from there, from those high seats, powerful and eloquent voices were raised more than a century ago in behalf of the fathers of our history and of the efforts which we were then making for our incipient independence.

"The visit of illustrious Americans has always given us pleasure. We have the recent remembrance of the visit of the distinguished Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, whose declarations we heard with delight and have collected and preserved with devotion, and of the lofty statements of the great President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, whose two terms will be eponymic on the American continent and, in general, throughout the world. (Very good!)

"It is our desire that the visit of all the great visitors from the United States, and, at the moment, the visit of Senator Green, may leave in their minds calm pictures and favorable recollections of our country.

"We want him to know, to be convinced, that in Uruguay we love and admire the United States, our sister nation, because it is a nation of the American continent; that we have always believed that that Nation has a providential role in the life of the world; that it seems as if it might have formed part of, have been a portion of another planet, particularly in these our times, so mean, so disturbed, and upset by greed, violence, and passions of all kinds.

"(Very good!)
"We hope that these visits may continue, that they may become more frequent than they are, that they may serve as a tie, as a bond, constantly renewed, between the United States and our countries." bond, constantly renewed, between the United States and our country, the ties which unite us to the United States must be multiplied and strengthened, cultural and spiritual interchange must be increased, also—why not say it?—commercial interchange, which always precedes or follows spiritual interchange and which, in either event, gives it more body and substance.

"Now, on behalf of all my colleagues, I express the warmest wish that Senator Green may have the most prosperous and happiest of his voyers."

"I feel very sure that if my colleagues of the American Senate had known that you would grant me the privilege of being received by the Senate of Uruguay, the American Senate would have unanimously sent a cordial greeting. That greeting would be, not only from the Senate of the United States of America, but from both Houses—that is, from the Congress—the greeting would also have been from the Government of the United States, presided over by Mr. Roosevelt, to whom the President of the Senate made reference in such cordial terms; and, what is still more important in a republic, the greeting of the entire people of the United States.

"(Very good! Applause in the chamber and in the galleries.)

"There is a constantly growing feeling in the United States that there should be closer relations between these countries. I do not refer only to commercial relations, which are, naturally, very important, but to cultural relations, which are even more important.

"The Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, whom you know and appreciate, shares this viewpoint. He wishes to cultivate commercial relations, but above all else he desires to cultivate and strengthen cultural relations.

"For many years I have wished to visit these countries; unfortunately I had to postpone the journey, because of lack of time. When, a couple of months ago, I saw it might be possible for me to make the trip, my friends in Washington, among them the President himself, immediately approved the proposed trip.

"The President of the United States told me that I would get a great deal from the trip and talked to me of the extremely pleasant impressions which he himself retains of his visits to these countries, and, above all, of his visit to Uruguay. The President particularly mentioned the welcome accorded him in this charming and hospitable city of Montevideo.

"I am going to have a great deal of pleasure in telling my colleagues in the American Senate about my trip and I am going to recommend that they follow my example, for it is my belief and opinion that it is very important that many Members of the Senate come to these countries, not only to talk to you of what is done there but to learn what is done here.

"I am a representative of the smallest State of the United States, Rhode Island; that State, nevertheless, has had a very important influence upon the history of the United States of America. "The same may be said of Uruguay as regards the history of the

"I sincerely hope that my colleagues of the American Senate will follow my example and come to visit you.

"In these days when there are everywhere wars or rumors of war, it is essential that the republics of the two Americas unite; the ideal of democracy depends on us.

"It is precisely for this reason that I am very happy to do what I can to make closer the relations between the Republics of Uruguay and the United States of America.

"I thank you again for the high honor which you have bestowed upon me, an honor which will long remain in my memory. "I have finished.

"(Very good. Applause in the chamber and in the galleries.) "Senator Green and Mr. Dawson, Minister of the United States in Uruguay, withdraw from the chamber."

EDITORIAL OPINION ON SILVER

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, with reference to the Townsend resolution on silver (S. J. Res. 1) and the Townsend bill (S. 785) for termination of silver purchases, and for other purposes, the following excerpts from newspaper editorials which have appeared in many widely separated parts of the country serve to reveal public displeasure with our present silver policy and indicate strong sympathy with the purpose of the resolution and bill just mentioned.

It is emphasized that the editorials here quoted have all appeared within the past 3 months. They are representative of editorial opinion concerning silver which goes back for a number of years. Were brief excerpts to be made from all such editorials criticizing the New Deal silver policy of recent years, such excerpts would fill a great many pages in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I ask unanimous consent that the editorials referred to may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There being no objection, the matter was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The News, of Newport, R. I.:
"Probably one of the most important measures introduced in the new Congress is the resolution of Senator Townsend, of Delaware, calling for an investigation of the present silver program. * * *

The Middletown Press, Middletown, Conn.:

New York Sun, New York, N. Y.:

Actual odds on the retention or repeal of the act depend upon how far Congress is willing to go in its coming battle with the administration. It may be taken for granted that the President will not favor repeal unless he is promised some compensatory political advantage. In their yearly silver review, the well-known firm of Handy & Harman set out again some of the absurdities and the enormous cost of the silver program. The cost will soon reach a billion, that huge total having been arrived at through the easy process of 'just a few millions' a year." millions' a year."

"The original justification for the program, as set forth by the President himself, was that it would 'assist in increasing and stabilizing domestic prices, augment the purchasing power in silver-using countries, and protect our foreign commerce against depreciating currencies." These arguments have subsequently been so thoroughly discredited, not only by arguments but by events, that no one would dare to advance them seriously today."

Journal-World, Lawrence, Kans.:

"As the [Mexican] expropriation began 20 years ago, some of the owners will have waited 30 years for their money if the agreement is kept. Repeal of that economic monstrosity would be mighty good proof that the election had affected the climate and that the breezes were beginning to blow from common-sense quarters. Stoppage of the silver nonsense could by no stretch of the imagination work any deflationary influence on anything or anybody, except a handful of western silver mine operators. It would save the taxpayers a lot of money and prepare the way for real work in the restoration of confidence, without which no amount of inflationary hocuspocus ever will bring back prosperity."

The Telegram, Clarksburg, W. Va.:

"We have heard a great deal during the last few months about the bogging down of certain features of the New Deal. * *

"Along this general line of New Deal accomplishments, we might mention our silver program. The President has announced that he will continue the purchase of silver, with the taxpayers money, for another 6 months, at a price which is nearly twice as high as he will continue the purchase of silver, with the taxpayers' money, for another 6 months, at a price which is nearly twice as high as the world price. Somebody here might take a look at the record. When the silver purchasing program was started it was said that by paying nearly twice the world price for silver we would increase the world price of the metal, raise the value of commodities, and help the silver standard nations, such as China and Mexico. Well, we have spent more than a billion dollars buying silver here and abroad for nearly twice what it is worth. The world price of silver has advanced little, if any, the price of commodities is no higher now than 4 years ago—not so high if we measure the present value of the dollar in terms of gold—and we have not helped China extent to drive her off the silver standard. As for Mexico—well, whether we have helped her or not she is helping herself—to the property of American citizens in that country by taking it without paying for it. But we are to go on for another 6 months buying Mexico's silver for more than it is worth to show our appreciation."

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO REPORT DURING RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all committees may be authorized during the recess or adjournment of the Senate to make reports on bills and nominations.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for the suggestion that he ask unanimous consent that the President of the Senate be authorized to sign any bills or joint resolutions ready for his signature during the adjournment of the Senate? It may be that the relief measure will be ready.

Mr. BARKLEY. I include in my request the request that the President of the Senate be authorized to sign any bills or joint resolutions ready for his signature during the adjournment of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

WORK OF THE SESSION-ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there being no further business for today, and no business on the calendar which requires the Senate to be in session during the remainder of the week, it is my purpose to move that the Senate adjourn until noon on Monday next.

I should like to make a suggestion to committees, without in any way desiring that they act with undue haste on any pending legislation. We always have the present situation at the beginning of a session. Then toward the end of a session we find a crowded calendar, and find it difficult, within the time at our disposal later in the session, deliberately to dispose of bills which are reported by committees. I suggest that all committees which have important legislation before them, having regard for proper deliberation and consideration of all such measures, act as promptly as possible to report such measures for the calendar, so that the Senate may not be required to adjourn from time to time for 3 days because there is nothing to do.

I now move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next. The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 6, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Horace E. Cromer, pastor of the Emory Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God and Heavenly Father, who in Thine infinite mercy hast promised wisdom and guidance to all those who ask it of Thee, grant the knowledge of truth and the will to be led by it to each of these Thy servants.

Thou hast a high destiny for our people. Thou hast a mission for our Nation in this day. Guide Thou us, O great Jehovah, as we seek the way that is Thine.

Let truth abound. Let justice weigh our deliberations. Let only right emerge from our halls. Let the people of our land and of all lands be blessed through the gracious presence and eternal power of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed without amendment to concurrent resolutions of the House of the following

H. Con. Res. 4. Concurrent resolution to commemorate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the First Congress of the United States under the Constitution: and

H. Con. Res. 5. Concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of additional copies of House Report No. 2 on "Investigation of Un-American Activities and Propaganda."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) entitled "Joint resolution making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939."

The message also announced that the Senate further insists upon its amendment No. 9 to the foregoing joint resolution, disagreed to by the House; asks a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. McKellar, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. Townsend to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

RESIGNATIONS FROM COMMITTEES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignations from committees:

FEBRUARY 1, 1939.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, Speaker of the House of Representatives,

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Speaker: As I am now chairman of the War Claims Committee, I will be too occupied with other duties to give the proper attention to my membership on the District Committee.

I therefore respectfully tender my resignation as a member of the District of Columbia Committee.

Sincerely yours,

R. T. WOOD.

JANUARY 31, 1939.

Hon. WILLIAM BANKHEAD,

Speaker, House of Representatives,

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

mended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1: Makes not to exceed $15,000,000 of the appropriation contained in the joint resolution to the Works Progress Administration available for providing direct relief for needy persons, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 2: Limits involuntary separations prior to April 1 1000 to 5 nevent of persons employed on work relief

April 1, 1939, to 5 percent of persons employed on work relief projects, and requires the apportionment, at the discretion of the Administrator of the Works Progress Administration, of available funds remaining on such date, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 3: Requires, in the event of an emergency calling for the provision of additional funds, the submission by the President with the estimate for an additional appropriation a statement as to the facts constituting such emergency, as proposed by the Senate.
On amendment No. 4: Requires the Administrator of the Works

Progress Administration immediately to canvass pay rolls and eliminate therefrom relief employees on work projects not in actual need, as proposed by the Senate with a clarifying modifi-

On amendment No. 5: Makes available for Federal agency projects an additional $28,000,000, instead of an additional $33,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, and an additional $23,000,000, as proposed by the House.

posed by the House.

On amendment No. 6: Strikes out the proposal of the Senate making $3,000,000 of the amount contained in the joint resolution for Federal agency projects available for the employment of unemployed railroad and express company employees having clerical experience for the transcription and compilation of records of railroad employment and compensation prior to January 1, 1937.

On amendment No. 7: Eliminates all exceptions to the proviso intended to prevent positions being placed in the competitive classified civil service of the United States. The House had proposed certain exceptions and the Senate proposed a further exception conditioned upon the enactment of the exceptions which the House had proposed.

House had proposed.

On amendments Nos. 8, 11, 14, 15, and 16: In lieu of two separated House provisions (amendments Nos. 8 and 11), one denying rated House provisions (amendments Nos. 8 and 11), one denying payment from the supplemental appropriation proposed in the joint resolution to any person who attempts to influence the vote of any other person drawing remuneration from such appropriation, and the other directed against supervisors, foremen, or other officials under the Works Progress Administration who attempt to influence the political opinions of subordinates, substitutes, as proposed by the Senate (amendments Nos. 14, 15, and 16), provisions making it a felony—

(1) For any person to offer any reward possible under the terms of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, as amended by the instant joint resolution, for political activity or for the support of or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

(2) For any person to deprive, attempt to deprive, or threaten to deprive any other person of any benefit flowing from the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, as amended by the instant joint resolution, on account of race, creed, color, or any political activity, support of, or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

(3) For any person, directly or indirectly, to solicit campaign contributions from any person compensated out of funds contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or in the instant amendatory joint resolution.

And a provision making it unlawful, punishable by removal from office, for any administrative or supervisory official, wholly or partly compensated out of funds appropriated in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, or the instant amendatory joint Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, or the instant amendatory posseresolution, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the results thereof, or to engage actively in political management or campaigns.

On amendments Nos. 10 and 13: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the House provision directed against aliens participating in Senate, the House provision directed against aliens participating in the appropriation contained in the instant joint resolution, and in lieu thereof, instead of reenacting section 11 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, as proposed by the Senate, reenacts such section amended to exclude aliens, and requiring all persons employed on relief projects to make affidavit as to their United States citizenship as a condition precedent to the payment of compensation.

On amendment No. 12: In lieu of the House provision directed against the establishment of hosiery mills, denies the use of funds appropriated in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or in the instant joint resolution for the establishment of mills or factories which would manufacture for sale articles or materials in competition with existing industries, as proposed by the Senate.

tories which would manufacture for sale articles or materials in competition with existing industries, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 17: Amends section 21 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 so as to confine reports to be submitted to Congress of expenditures and obligations to the classes of operations on account of which incurred and the amounts thereto appertaining, as proposed by the Senate.

On Amendment No. 18: Reenacts, as proposed by the Senate, section 12 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, directed against the continuance on Works Progress Administration rolls of persons declining offers of private employment, substituting "the prevailing wage" for the presently obtaining condition that the offered job must pay as much or more as the person to whom offered would or could receive during continued employment by the Works Progress Administration for the period such private employment would be available.

On amendment No. 19: Denies the use of funds appropriated in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, or in the instant joint resolution for the manufacture, purchase, or construction of any naval vessel, any armament, munitions, or implement of war, for military or naval forces, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment in disagreement

The committee of conference report in disagreement the following amendment of the Senate:

On amendment No. 9: Striking out the provision proposed by the House designed to eliminate differentials in rates of pay of relief workers upon work of the same general class in different areas of the country where work obtains of the same general type.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman from Virginia explain the conference report first. We would like to know just what it means.

Mr. Woodrum of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, we are now considering the conference report upon the first emergency relief bill of this Congress. I understand that it is in the program that there shall be another one before we get through the Congress. In this bill, for the first time, there is an approach to an appreciation of the responsibilities of Congress to take relief problems out of politics to a certain extent. Heretofore there has not been that appreciation of that problem, necessary before we begin to solve the relief problem in America. To my mind the funds appropriated in this bill at this time are amply sufficient to meet the needs of employment on the W. P. A. or anything of that kind, if it is honestly and fairly administered. I believe there are upon that roll thousands, hundreds of thousands, who have been on it ever since the W. P. A. was started. On one project alone, in the Government, in the Treasury Department, upwards of 50 percent are still on the rolls of one project who have been on them ever since the W. P. A. was started. When we are appropriating money for relief purposes and those rolls are not kept clean and right and people are kept on those rolls that should not be kept on, and there is no account taken of it, then we have nothing to go by so that we may realize just how bad the situation is. I am certain that we could get rid of 500,000 from these rolls if we just take off those who have been on ever since the thing started, and who do not belong on the rolls. There has been the beginning, an effort to stop the operations of politics in relief.

Politics in relief needs to be stopped. Even right up to the present time there has been no appreciation of the necessity of stopping fraudulent operations of politics in relief on the part of the Relief Administration. Right at the present time there is a trial going on in the State of New Mexico where 35 are under indictment for W. P. A. frauds. The Federal grand jury in New York City the day before yesterday presented an item to the court asking that the Federal district attorney conduct a widespread investigation of W. P. A. frauds, and I hold in my hand a copy of the Burlington Free Press. of Burlington, Vt., dated Monday, January 30, 1939. In that paper there is an account of how Mrs. Inella B. McKay, of Barre, Vt., secretary of the woman's and professional divisions of the State W. P. A., was dismissed by the administrator, Samuel H. Crosby, recently appointed-right up to date, effective February 1-because she refused to contribute $15 to the Democratic election campaign last fall. She was called in, she was told that there was no question of her efficiency, but there had come a time when there must be a distinction between Democrats and Republicans as to whether or not they should be considered for employment by the W. P. A. Right now while we are adopting in the House and the Senate provisions to prevent the operation of politics in the W. P. A., while we are endeavoring to prevent the continuation of the W. P. A. as a racket, the heads of the W. P. A. are going along just as blindly, just as wildly, just as incompetently as ever in carrying on that kind of operation. It is time that it was stopped.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman says that the heads of the W. P. A. are going along. I take it he means that the heads of the W. P. A. are responsible for this incident which he relates, in which a woman was removed from the rolls because she failed to contribute. Does the gentleman mean to say that Mr. Hopkins or anyone on this staff here in Washington knew of or directed or approved it?

Mr. TABER. I do not know. I know that the local State administrator, Mr. Witters, was removed and an outsider named, Mr. Crosby, and that one of his first operations after the 1st of January was to discharge this woman because she failed to contribute $15 toward the last Democratic campaign.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Does the gentleman know that in many States of the Union Republicans who were in charge of local work discharged Democrats because they were not in sympathy with the Republican Party?

Mr. TABER. Any Republican who does that kind of a job ought not to be on the roll.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. And does the gentleman know that in none of these instances was such action approved or directed by those in charge? Of course, in a vast organization employing hundreds of thousands of men it is impossible to control either Democrats or Republicans in local positions. Certainly the gentleman is in error in saying that the heads were responsible if he refers to Mr. Hopkins or his staff.

Mr. TABER. I refer in this particular instance to the man who was made head of it, and when he had failed to carry politics into W. P. A. in the State of Vermont, he was removed.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. But is it the gentleman's sincere belief that Mr. Hopkins or his staff in Washington had anything to do with that or directed any such operations anywhere?

Mr. TABER. It is my opinion that Hopkins all the way through, until right down to the present time, has approved of that kind of operation.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman ought to give us some evidence to substantiate that statement.

Mr. TABER. I have had no faith in Hopkins' operations from the beginning.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. But the gentleman does not cite any evidence to support his lack of faith.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Hopkins was very vociferous all the way through the primary campaigns in lining up people who were employed on W. P. A. to vote particular ways in the primaries and in the elections.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. But did he at any time indicate any knowledge of dismissal of those who failed to contribute, or dismissal of those who failed to support the ticket?

Mr. TABER. I have no specific knowledge that Mr. Hopkins did that. I hope that some action will follow the operation of this man Crosby up in Vermont, and that he will be removed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from New York 5 additional minutes.

Mr. TABER. If Mr. Crosby is removed, following this latest political operation of the W. P. A., someone might have some faith.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Following the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri that Republicans discharged W. P. A. workers because they did not contribute or support certain candidates, I would like to say that in Tennessee no Republican is permitted to hold a salaried position or a position of authority in W. P. A. A Republican is very fortunate if he is allowed to use a pick and shovel down there.

Mr. TABER. I am not talking about individual cases in detail. I refuse to yield further, Mr. Speaker. I only have a couple of minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. But the State of Tennessee is an exception.

Mr. TABER. I refuse to yield further. There is one thing that I must refer to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TABER. I cannot yield. If I have time, I will yield later.

The result of all this is what we have been saying, who have tried to stand for what was right here on the floor for the last 6 years, namely, that it is absolutely impossible for the Federal administration to go down in the different localities in this country and operate relief or relief employment. If we are ever going to get anywhere in solving the relief problem, and that is what I want to see, we must operate it through local authorities. We must take what Federal funds are to be used for relief, and allocate them in some absolute way to the local authorities, who are locally responsible for the taxes that are levied upon their people. With the requirement of local contribution we must put the responsibility up to the local authorities, and they will see then, when the responsibility is upon them, that no one who is not entitled to be on relief, is placed on relief or relief employment. Those of us who have opposed these bills by which money was spent mostly for something that was not relief, have opposed them not because we were opposed to relief, but because we were opposed to continuous rackets in relief, and because we were opposed to doing something with the money that was not taking care of the relief problem of America. I am hopeful that a step has been taken which will lead the way to some kind of a solution of the relief problem, and that we will get down to earth on it and try to solve it, and not try to postpone the solution of it as we have been doing for 5 or 6 years under the emergency administration.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.
Mr. GIFFORD. With reference to amendment 12, the mills and factories already established with this money is water over the dam, is it not?

Mr. TABER. Well, it is worse than that. It is a continuous menace to America.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will they be allowed to continue? I notice that the Comptroller General has ruled against the F. S. A. spending money for mills and factories, but says the water has gone over the dam and they cannot do anything about it.

Mr. TABER. They should not be allowed any money to continue it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Referring directly to the language at the bottom of page 7 and the top of page 8, does the gentleman believe, with his knowledge of Government procedure, checks and balances, with this language, written as it is, that it will be possible for the men in charge down here to stop the payment of salaries to men high and low and in between, who had contributed to such activities, as has been set forth in the newspaper reports, and such activities as Mr. Hopkins engaged in during the last campaign? I desire the gentleman's opinion on that particular language.

Mr. TABER. I do not believe this language is strong enough to eradicate the improper use of W. P. A. funds, but I do believe that there is going to be a sense of responsibility on the part of the legislative representatives of the American people to put the relief problem on an intelligent basis and stop its being a racket. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman believe that such power is contained in this bill?

Mr. TABER. Not for the complete elimination of that particular abuse.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; I mean for the prevention of the payment of salary.

Mr. TABER. No.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We will never eliminate the abuse.

Mr. TABER. No.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

(Mr. Woodrum of Virginia asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the conference report on House Joint Resolution 83 presents no very serious matters of controversy. I believe that every Member of the House is perhaps in a general way familiar with what has been transpiring in that regard. I am not going into very much detail unless there is some question about it.

We know, of course, that the amount of $725,000,000, the amount ascertained by the House to be appropriate for relief, has been definitely decided upon and is no longer an open question. I feel now even more strongly than when we presented the bill that the conclusions of the subcommittee which were subsequently ratified by the full committee and then by the House and the Senate were very timely and very appropriate. I feel confident that if this amount is wisely administered in an effort to carry out the wishes of Congress that it will meet the situation. I am encouraged in this expectation-and I hope I may say with pardonable pridebecause the distinguished gentleman who now heads W. P. A., an outstanding Army engineer, is from my native State of Virginia. It is my belief that he has a great ambition to do a good job with the troublesome and perplexing matter that he has to handle.

Several amendments were added to the bill by the Senate, to which amendments the House agreed. One of the matters of considerable interest in the House was the question of civil service. As the conference report comes to you all employees of the Government who are paid salaries out of emergency funds are prohibited from being blanketed under civil service. You will recall that as the bill left the House this inhibition applied only to the administrative staff of W. P. A. As the bill stands now it applies to all of the temporary personnel. Personally I regret that some groups may not be covered under civil service. This action is in no sense a reflection on a large number of very faithful public employees. I am in hopes that the Civil Service Committee headed by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] may be able to give careful thought and consideration to just what can be done looking toward bringing into the service this group of employees now with a temporary status whom we think might be included in civil service. Such a bill as this, obviously, is not the place to do it.

The amendment affecting differentials in wages is still in controversy and will come up after we act on the conference report.

The only other matter which I shall take time to mention is amendment 18 put in by the Senate. This amendment undertakes to provide that any employee, any relief worker, who is offered private employment and who refuses it will be stricken from the rolls. Some apprehension was expressed that perhaps a man might be offered private employment 1 day a week which would obviously give him 4 or 5 days' employment a month and would thereby be made ineligible for W. P. A. employment. I am very glad to state for the Record in order that it may be of as much value as such a statement can be, that the conferees were of the opinion that no such strained construction would be justified, but that the language in the end of the amendment, to wit:

Provided, That any person who takes such private employment shall on expiration thereof, be entitled to immediate resumption of his previous employment status with the Works Progress Administration if he is still in need and if he has lost the private employment through no fault of his own.

The conferees think this language will afford some protection. It was not contemplated that an offer of private employment of a day or so here and there, even though permanent, when the compensation is obviously not sufficient would afford a reasonable income, of at least approximately security

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not know whether the gentleman cares to answer this question now or wishes to wait until the matter comes up later, but it is rumored that Colonel Harrington has said that should this wage differential amendment prevail it would set aside the prevailing wage principle that is now in effect.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is the position taken by Colonel Harrington and the W. P. A.; and, of course, it was my position when I opposed the amendment on the floor of the House, but this subject will come up for pretty full discussion in just a few moments.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I read the following language from page 5 of the bill:

Provided jurther, That no funds herein appropriated shall be used by any Federal agency, to establish mills or factories which would manufacture for sale articles or materials in competition with existing industries.

Is it understood also that no money will be given by relief agents to those factories that are already established by the Government?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No money herein appropriated can be used for that purpose.

Mr. RICH. That is, for the establishment of factories?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. RICH. Is there going to be any money given for the operation of factories?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not under this bill. This amendment protects the appropriation in the bill but does not reach back to the other bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman refer to amendments Nos. 2 and 4 and see if they do not conflict? Amendment No. 2 provides that not less than 5 percent shall be separated from the service by April 1, and amendment No. 4 provides that the Administrator must immediately canvass the pay rolls and separate from the service those who are not in need. Is there not a conflict there? Suppose he finds more than 5 percent should be furloughed?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No. Under this bill, if an administrator should find that even 15 percent of those on the rolls are not in actual need, he would take them off. I do not think Congress means to say that people not in actual need are to be retained on the relief rolls.

Mr. COCHRAN. There is one other item about which I would like to inquire. It is provided that every one of the 3,000,000 or more on the roll must make an affidavit that they are American citizens. That is not objectionable, but there is no provision as to who is going to pay for the affidavits. In other words, considering the usual notary fee of 50 cents. there will be $1,500,000 of the money of the poor unfortunate W. P. A. employees that will go to notaries public. May I ask the gentleman if in his opinion the Administrator would be justified in taking the necessary money to secure the affidavits out of the relief appropriation and not take it out of the pockets of the people getting $25, $35, or $50 a month?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I agree with the sentiment expressed by the gentleman.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman think the Administrator can do this?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think the Administrator should have someone available to take these affidavits. I do not believe there will be any administrative difficulty experienced in taking these affidavits when a person registers for

Mr. COCHRAN. It is the intent of Congress, then, that the

W. P. A. shall pay for this and not the individual? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. GEYER of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEYER of California. I notice on page 9 it mentions that no one shall be employed who has refused private employment. Is there any guaranty there as to what the wages shall be? Is that just left up to anyone?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I stated it was the sense of the conferees that, of course, the private employment should be sufficient to provide a reasonable existence.

Mr. GEYER of California. There is no safeguard here. Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think the proper administrative function would be based on that construction.

Mr. GEYER of California. When it speaks of "no fault of his own," who determines the fault? Is there not an opportunity for an employer who is very hostile to the W. P. A. to take on a group of people who may be on relief, and then discharge those folks and say it was through a fault of their own? What sort of safeguard is there to prevent that?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That would be a possibility, but practically it would not be so, because we have a similar provision in the present bill, and that fact can be determined, we think, without any difficulty.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman last year was kind enough to give me an assurance that if a man had a 3-day-a-week job on the W. P. A. and he mowed a lawn or two on the side, he would not lose his status. Would the gentleman give me that reassurance today?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think the bill speaks for itself on that, I may say to the gentleman. That is, the paragraph we have been discussing.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. BOREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma

Mr. BOREN. With reference to the provision covering aliens, does that refer to those now working on the W. P. A.? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; it does.

Mr. BOREN. If a contest should arise over an affidavit, the alien could be relieved from the roll?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Suppose a man was on the W. P. A. and was offered private work for 2 weeks; would he still be eligible to go back on the W. P. A. rolls?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If he lost his private employment through no fault of his own, he can be reconsidered.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Suppose he was offered work for 2 weeks; is he eligible to return to the W. P. A. rolls?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. He is.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, there is an ancient legend of a king who had 10,000 men and who marched them up the hill and marched them down again. Our friends, in emulation of that illustrious example, marched up the hill to reduce this appropriation, to reduce the amount of money provided for the support of W. P. A., to take more than a million men from the W. P. A. rolls. And in this conference report they march back down again to where they started. For this report repudiates every avowal made when the resolution was under discussion in the House and nullifies any retrenchment or economy the resolution may have carried when it went to the Senate. It is the most remarkable retreat ever witnessed on this floor.

Beginning, for example, with amendment No. 1, which provides that out of the funds appropriated in this resolution $15,000,000 shall be allocated for direct relief. Why, Mr. Speaker, this is more than was asked by anyone who appeared before the committee. Even the mayors of the cities who came before the committee asking for an appropriation in excess of a billion dollars assured us that there was no occasion for the Federal Government to make provision for direct relief. They explained that their municipalities and other units of local government were taking care of all cases requiring direct relief, and limited their requests for Federal aid to provision for work relief exclusively. But in this report we have gone them one better, and although they did not ask for a dollar of direct relief, we have generously provided $15,000,000 for that purpose in addition to ample funds appropriated for the real purpose of the resolution.

Let us pass on to amendment No. 2. In amendment No. 2 you have the most remarkable provision that could possibly be submitted. All the tenor of debate by our colleagues when the resolution was first considered on the floor was to the effect that they were unalterably, irrevocably committed to a reduction of the number employed by W. P. A. Colonel Harrington, when queried as to his program under a $150,-000,000 reduction, said he would employ 3,000,000 in January, 2,800,000 in February, 2,600,000 in March, and so on down the line. The proponents of the cut in the appropriation announced, as their objective, a total reduction of more than a million breadwinners. And yet, as incredible as it may seem, here is a paragraph in the conference report arbitrarily forbidding a reduction of more than 5 percent prior to April 1. P. W. A. proposes to reduce the rolls at the rate of 200,-000 per month but these gentlemen who have been urging reduction will not let them do it. No matter how many undeserving men they find on the rolls; regardless of what the conditions or circumstances may be; however flagrant the imposition, this conference report arbitrarily locks the door against a reduction of more than 5 percent.

My good friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber], who spoke just a moment ago, said—and I quote his exact words—that there are hundreds of thousands of men on these rolls who ought not to be there. Yet the gentleman signs a conference report which provides, notwithstanding his assertions, that all these unworthy and undeserving men are on the rolls, that Colonel Harrington shall not be permitted to follow out his plan as announced to the committee of reducing the rolls at the rate of 200,000 a month.

But that is just the beginning. Let us take up amendment No. 4. Amendment No. 4 directs the Administrator to investigate all relief projects and eliminate from the rolls those not in actual need. Certainly there is no difficulty in understanding that language. But when the Administrator proposes to comply with it he is met by the express prohibition in amendment 2 against dismissing more than 5 percent. Now, on one knows until an investigation is made how many on the rolls come under this classification. But the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], who has made an exhaustive study of the subject, gives it as his considered opinion that the number extends into hundreds of thousands. If that be true, why bring in a report under which they cannot be taken off the rolls. In one portion of the report-in amendment 2-the conferees direct that they be left on. And in another section of the resolution—amend-ment 4—they direct that they be taken off, and the jewel of consistency is buried so deep, not only here but throughout the report, that it can never be unearthed when W.P.A. confronts the problem of administering the law.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. In just a minute.

Let us turn to a still more extraordinary provision of the conference report. Mind you, the proposition was to reduce the amount allowed for the support of the W. P. A. We propose to cut the estimate $150,000,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. I may say to the gentleman that a reduction of 5 percent in the rolls during the months of February and March would be at the rate of 150,000 a month, so 300,000 persons might be taken off the rolls; and, even so, a direction following that provision, to throw off those who do not belong on the rolls, would control.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman is exactly right as to the 5 percent aggregating 150,000. But the 5 percent is not 5 percent per month. To quote the language of the amendment, it is 5 percent "prior to April 1." So the total number that can be taken from the rolls is 150,000 up to April 1.

When Colonel Harrington appeared before the committee he said that with $725,000,000 he would throw off 200,000 the first month and 200,000 the second month. He wanted to throw off 400,000 but the House conferees say, "No; not more than 150,000."

Now let us come to the real essence of the proposition. The proposal here was to reduce the amount requested by $150,000,000 and take off the rolls over 1,000,000 workers. But actually they bring in a proposal to appropriate $725,000,000, and then invite the President of the United States to send down a message and ask for any other amount he believes the emergency warrants. In order that there may be no misapprehension about it, let me read amendment 3:

(3) Provided further, That should there arise an emergency which in the opinion of the President would require the submission of an estimate for an additional appropriation, the President in submitting such estimate shall submit a statement as to the facts constituting such emergency.

The significant feature of this, Mr. Speaker, is that under existing law the President already has that authority. And everyone knows it. Then why did they put it in this conference report? They did so as a specific, gratuitous, and emphatic invitation to the President to spend this $725,-000,000 and then come in and ask for as much more as he considers necessary. No limit is specified. He may ask for $150,000,000 or he may ask for $250,000,000. So the Congress is not so hard-hearted as might at first appear. Our friends the House conferees are not as "hard-boiled" as they would have you think. They do not propose to turn a million men out into the snow.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CANNON of Missouri. In just a minute.

They do not propose to take the responsibility of enacting legislation that will have that effect. So they put in the report all these jokers, riders, and loopholes to be certain that no one will suffer. They do not even propose to limit the President to the $875,000,000 first suggested, but they thoughtfully provide that he may request any amount which in his discretion he may find the emergency requires.

Now comes the amusing part of this conference report. My friend the gentleman from New York inveighs eloquently against politics in relief. He said we had in this bill an approach—note the words, "an approach"—to the alleviation of this distressing condition, and yet when the Senate of the United States brings in a resolution which not only "approaches" the problem but which will do the work he concurs in striking out of the amendment of the Senate the most important phrase in it. For the Senate amendment prohibits not only the solicitation of funds in the expenditure of this particular appropriation, but also under "any other law passed by the Congress." It is sweeping; it is all-embracing; it has teeth; it will do the work. But his heart fails him, and he now comes in and signs a conference report which takes out of the Senate amendment the most important provision in it, reducing it from a solution of the problem to an "approach" to the problem.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I want to congratulate the conference committee on this splendid report. They have been more than generous. They have given more than was asked. They are keeping on men the W. P. A. proposed to take off, and they are throwing the gates wide open not only to the expenditure of $725,000,000 but to any further sum which the President, in his discretion, may find the emergency requires.

I congratulate them on their remarkable retreat from everything for which they stood when the bill was before the House. I especially congratulate the other side of the aisle, which has been in control of this legislation from its initiation, which has dictated every step that has been taken, even to the signing of the conference report. I felicitate my distinguished friend the gentleman from New York on his consummate generalship. He has handled it admirably, even to making certain that it did not go quite too far in taking politics out of it. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Speaker, seriously speaking, it should not be overlooked that in passing on this conference report we are dealing with a very serious problem. In making this ample and generous appropriation we are not merely appropriating money. We are not appropriating dollars so much as we are appropriating livelihoods. We are appropriating food, shelter, clothing, and warmth for those who otherwise could not have it, and in doing so we are serving not merely these 3,000,000 men and these 3,000,000 families; we are serving the Nation.

What happens when 3,000,000 men are thrown out of work? Three million families quit consuming. Three million families quit buying and merchants stop selling and factories stop making and factory labor stops working.

Starvation cannot balance the Budget. It never has and it never will. But a reduction in jobs can unbalance a budget, and is the most effective way of unbalancing the Nation's Budget that can be conceived or enacted by Congress.

It is not the duty of Congress to destroy jobs. It is the duty of Congress to maintain jobs. It is the duty of Congress to create jobs. It is the duty of Congress to provide employment, to keep the wheels of business and industry moving; and from the bottom of my heart I congratulate the gentlemen who have brought in this report and who have made such ample provision—provision beyond all expectation and beyond all requests—for the support of the W. P. A. They will find it as bread cast upon the waters. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER and Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia rose.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. I wonder if the gentleman would be able to tell the House how it happened that in view of the statement the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] has made here the gentleman from Missouri signed the conference report.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. But, Mr. Speaker, it was not I who made the protestations. The gentleman is the one who has gone back on everything he has been standing for when he signed the report. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am a little bit confused myself about the situation. I find my beloved colleague on the conference IMr. CannonI, although very happy about the final outcome of everything, somewhat caustic in his criticism of the action which was taken and to which he, so far as I know without any protestations whatever at any time or at any place, assented.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I heartily concur in the conference report. It gives just what we have been asking for.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There are one or two things that ought to be straightened out in the Record right now.

My friend from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] said that gentlemen on the left-hand side, the Republicans, had dictated everything that had happened on this relief proposition. I say to you, and to the country, that the figure of $725,000,000, about which there is no magic any more than there is about $700,000,000 or $750,000,000, but that amount of $725,000,000 presently being appropriated by the Congress as a legislative function, is the amount decided upon by seven out of the eight Democrats on the subcommittee who handled it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. And the gentleman should also explain to the House that a majority of the Democrats on the Committee on Appropriations, and a majority of the Democrats on this floor, and a majority of the Democrats in the Senate, voted against this proposition. Only 8 out of the 25 Democratic members of the Committee on Appropriations passed between the tellers here in voting for this reduction. A majority of the party in the committee, a majority of the party in the House, a majority of the party in the Senate, believes in supporting an adequate appropriation for W. P. A., and voted that way.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. And I say to the gentleman that Congress is legislating. The ultimate judgment of 435 Members is what counts in legislation. I do not find anywhere in our system of government where a majority of the people on one side or the other should ever count greater when they pass through the tellers; and a very responsible and a very respectful proportion of my colleagues over here supported the proposition that is finally enacted into law, and by this action taken today, which will put the word "finis" at the end of it, Congress has certainly established one principle which I hope it may never retreat from, and that is that the legislative body can legislate and that it does not ever have to delegate those powers to the Workers' Alliance or to the Mayors' Conference. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. It is true that the Congress can legislate, but in this instance the Congress was denied an opportunity to go on record in reference to the amount that the Administration asked for. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is not correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. Due solely to a clever parliamentary maneuver in the manner in which that bill was brought to this floor.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If a majority of this House in the Committee of the Whole, one majority, had wished to place a billion and a half or two billion or five billion dollars in the bill, every Member of this House could have gone on record on that proposition. That is the most fanciful, the most fantastic, the most childish proposition that anybody could present to this body—that some parliamentary maneuver accounts for it all.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Why, then, did the gentleman depart from the procedure always followed in every instance in the last 20 years in order to achieve that result?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Oh, the gentleman and I do not agree on that procedure.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I inserted in the Record the title and the numbers of every such bill considered in the last 20 years, and if the gentleman can recall a single instance to the contrary, and he will submit them, we would be glad to have them.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I can bring in in a few days the independent offices appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. But that is beside the point. The bill he mentions is not one of these bills.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is an appropriation bill. I have never seen the Appropriations Committee report out what the Budget estimates amounted to.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The list printed in the Record includes every such bill introduced in the last 20 years.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman made a lone and valiant fight for $875,000,000, backed up by the Workers' Alliance, backed up by the Mayors' Conference.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. And by the national leaders of the Democratic Party and the Democratic leaders in this House and the Democratic leaders of the Senate. By the official resolutions of the farm organizations, labor organizations, and veterans' organizations. Add those.

Mr. SHANNON. And the needy and the suffering.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have listened to those who speak about so-called secrecy on the vote taken on the amount of the appropriation. The gentleman would not desire to join those persons who want to leave the impression that any Member of this House would be afraid to go on record in this matter? I voted with the able gentleman from Virginia and his committee, on the teller vote for the $725,000,000 in opposition to the amendment offered by Congressman Cannon of Missouri, which would have raised the amount to $875,000,000.

During my service in Congress, I have supported a program for work-relief funds, and it shall be my continued purpose to vote for adequate appropriations in this connection. At this time I carefully considered the matter and felt it was right and proper for me to sustain the House Appropriations Committee. We will be in session for several months, and if it is found necessary to bring before the Congress an additional appropriation to take care of the work-relief program, I shall support such a measure.

I have nothing to hide in connection with my vote on all bills coming before the House. Had there been a record roll call, I would have done just as I did by teller vote.

I have told the people of my district and State that I was for the $725,000,000. I repeat that I would have welcomed an opportunity to vote on a roll call on the matter. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Of course. Not only that, but I have personally got a lot of amusement out of the lather that some of my friends have worked themselves into in feeling that this is a matter of administration prestige or that there is anything of that kind involved in whether we appropriate $725,000,000 or $875,000,000. No such issue as that was made in the House. After the bill left here I understand there was a good deal of interest displayed, but this bill does just exactly what the President of the United States has wanted to do. It provides money to take care of the unemployed, to relieve suffering, and the President from this rostrum, if anyone seeks to invoke that, said that the question of the amount of it was for the Congress.

The Congress has taken its responsibility. Of course, the President can come back for more if he wishes to. It was not necessary to put that in the law. He had the right to come back if he desired to do so. Whether Congress will appropriate it is a legislative function for the Congress to say at the proper time.

The gentleman made quite a point of putting $15,000,000 in here for direct relief. That was a humane provision, undertaken to give some discretion and some latitude in case some sort of emergency should arise.

Now, I think Congress has done a good job on this bill. This amount of money is allocated in this bill for a 5-month period. That is the way the thing stands when the President signs it. We did put safeguards in, that there could not be any great discharge of people during the winter months, and we think that was a wise safeguard. In my judgment, if this is effectively administered in line with trying to carry out the intention of Congress, it will be an ample amount to take care of the situation.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on agreeing to the conference report. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 9: On page 4, line 19, strike out "Provided further, That the appropriations herein made shall not be available unless and until rates of pay of employees of the Works Progress Administration are so fixed by appropriate administrative order as to eliminate differentials in rates of pay of workers of the same general class exceeding 25 percent of the maximum rates as between workers employed in different States or different areas of the same general type in the several States."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 9.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Cochran moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment No. 9.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important amendment. When I tell you that the Administrator and Assistant Administrator of W. P. A. are absolutely unable to give even an estimate of the amount of money that will be necessary to carry out its provisions, you can realize its importance. What are you going to have to do if the Tarver amendment remains in the bill? You will have to increase the wages of those in certain areas; and if you do that, naturally, you must allocate more money to those areas. The only way the situation can be met is to break down the present scale of wages by reducing the amount that is now being paid in the large cities of the United States; or, on the other hand, in view of the amount of money that will be needed to carry out the provisions of this amendment if the wage scale is not reduced, you will have to separate from the W. P. A. rolls hundreds of thousands of people who are in need of this work.

By the adoption of my motion, this bill will go to the President. The Senate has insisted on its amendment. I repeat what Colonel Harrington told me—that he absolutely could not give an estimate of the millions of dollars that will be required to carry out the provisions of this amendment. This is no time to be bringing in amendments of this character. We have gone along all of these years without such a provision in the law. It was defeated when the existing law was before this House. If you do not want to cause endless trouble, I say to you adopt my motion. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I think I should be frank with the House, in view of the motion that I made.

The motion which I made was that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment. I did that because I promised the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], in view of the fact that on a teller vote in the House this amendment was placed in the bill by rather a substantial majority, that I should endeavor to give the House another opportunity to express itself upon the matter. My position about the merits of it has not changed. I do not believe the proposition as it is sought to be reached by the amendment is administratively workable; that is, the differential language contained in the amendment that passed the House, and certainly not in the short length of time to which this appropriation would be applicable. I say that realizing very thoroughly the very marked differences in rates of pay which presently obtain and which I think certainly would not exist if the W. P. A. were more careful and cautious in applying the prevailing rate of wage provision, under which they are supposed to operate. I cannot believe if that were done that there would be as much difference as 18 cents an hour in one city for common labor and $1.10 in another city for common labor. There might be justifiable grounds for a wage differential, leaving this, that, and the other factor out, but certainly not to that extent; and I am under the very firm impression that if the W. P. A. would carefully and cautiously put into operation the prevailing rate-of-wage provision in existing law it would meet some of this objection. If not, then I should say we shall have to try to relieve the situation when we consider the 1940 relief bill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. DEMPSEY. What would happen in our insular possessions, such as Puerto Rico, if the Tarver amendment remains in the bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am fearful that it would cause a lot of confusion and that it might cause a very great upset in the administration of this law there, as well as elsewhere, in the remaining 5 months of this fiscal year.

As I said at the outset, I promised to bring the matter forward so that it might be considered and debated in the House. I have yielded to the gentleman from Missouri and I am now going to yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. It is true this amendment says and means that not one dollar of this money is going to be available until the Administrator carries out the provisions of this amendment. Colonel Harrington told me he did not know how long it would take to do it, yet he needs the money provided in this bill immediately. Is not this true?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It presents very great administrative difficulties.

Mr. COCHRAN. Would it not be better to make this money immediately available without this wage-differential amendment, and conduct an investigation between now and the time we pass the next bill to remedy the difficulty?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think that would be a wise thing to do.

Mr. COCHRAN. The wise thing to do is to recede and concur in the Senate amendment and send this bill to the President, is it not?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think it is.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In reference to the suggestion pertaining to Puerto Rico, what is the total amount of the $725,-000,000 which will be assigned to Puerto Rico? In other words, what importance should we attach to the 15- or 20-cent rate in Puerto Rico?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I should say not a very large amount.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It does not amount to anything at all, does it, relatively speaking?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Relatively negligible, I should say.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am glad the gentleman agrees with me

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Tarver].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I wish at the outset to express my very deep appreciation of the fairness and the diligence with which the conferees on the part of the House have sought to uphold the position of the House in the conference which has been had with regard to this particular amendment. My feeling that a further conference with the Senate conferees might be of benefit in working out this very troublesome problem may be at variance with the opinion of the chairman of the subcommittee, but arises from my confidence in his powers of persuasion and those of his colleagues, and is a matter of compliment to them rather than a criticism.

Let us get some of the cobwebs out of the way in this matter. I realize that all of us must bow cheerfully to the viewpoint of the House after it is correctly informed. I do hope, however, that it will be possible for us in this discussion to get the real facts before the House.

What is the present situation? Upon the passage of this bill through the House I placed in the RECORD certain statistical facts furnished to me by the Works Progress Administration itself, which showed that as between wages paid in certain different localities in the Nation to unskilled labor there are now in effect differentials ranging as high in some instances as from 500 to 600 percent-from 18 cents per hour in Tennessee to $1.025 per hour in Illinois-and that in certain other types of labor there are differentials effective in different sections of the country ranging as high as between 800 and 900 percent. This is a situation which ought to be corrected. I am sure there is not a Member of the House who will feel, for example, that in Tennessee or in any of the other numerous States where a wage rate for W. P. A. of below 25 cents per hour is in effect, changes in administrative provisions ought not to be made by which there shall at least be paid in every State a minimum W. P. A. wage of 25 cents an hour, which was the minimum fixed by this Congress in the passage of the Wage-Hour Act. In the passage of that act, if you will recall, the two branches of Congress took the position that the minimum wage ought not to be lower than that anywhere within the United States, and it placed in the Relief Act for 1938 a provision which was intended to bring about recognition by the W. P. A. of the 25-cents-per-hour rate as the minimum W. P. A. wage rate, but the W. P. A. has not done so.

In connection with this amendment of mine, which was adopted in the House but stricken out in the Senate, it would certainly be possible for these conferees to insert in lieu of the language of the House bill language which would insure the payment of the minimum wage of 25 cents per hour. This would not take so much additional money. This would not require the expenditure of the many millions which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] seems to fear will be needed. This would bring about only a measure of substantial justice and is in accord with the principle which was approved by this House upon its passage of the Wage-Hour Act. Aside from this possibility, there would be, in my judgment, no difficulty in the administration of a substitute provision which was considered by the conference committee: and may I say to you that according to my information this substitute provision was at one time practically agreed upon by the conferees. Failure to agree was occasioned by the action of one of the Senate conferees in changing the position which he had at one time assumed with reference to it. And may I say to you further that I have assurance, upon which I am justified in relying, that if the House should further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment the language which I am now about to read would be agreed to by the Senate conferees.

It is a question of whether or not you are willing to delay passage of this bill for a few hours, perhaps until 4 or 5 o'clock this afternoon, or until noon tomorrow, without injury to anybody in so doing, in an effort to compose and straighten out, to some extent at least, a very difficult problem that is now resulting in injustice to many hundreds of thousands of citizens of this country who are unfortunate enough to be upon our W. P. A. rolls.

May I read the language of this amendment as developed in conference.

Provided further, That subject to the provisions of section 9 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, the appropriation herein made shall cease to be available after the expiration of 60 days from the date of the approval of this act, unless in the meantime by appropriate administrative order the hourly rates of pay of relief employees of the same kind and performing the same character of work in areas of the same general type are so fixed as to eliminate as far as possible, consistent with local economic conditions, differentials of more than 25 percent of the maximum rates of pay.

You will observe that in the language of this substitute proposal, which, as I have stated, I am informed was at one time substantially agreed to in conference, the Works Progress Administration is given 60 days within which to make these changes.

If you will read the hearings had before the Senate committee, you will find that this is the period of time suggested by Colonel Harrington as necessary for such readjustment. You will find further that the language of the amendment is not ironclad, but it allows the Works Progress Administration some leeway in that it may take into consideration local economic conditions, and whatever orders it may initiate must be practicable in view of local economic conditions. Therefore, there could not result the tremendous upheaval or disruption in the work of the W. P. A. that my friend from Missouri fears.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I shall be glad to yield later. I wish to conclude this part of my remarks at the present time.

The gentleman from Missouri comes from a State in which this situation arose not long ago, and I direct his attention to it because I want to know if he approves it. You need only to examine the records of the Senate debate in order to find out that the facts I am stating are true. They were placed in the Record by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark].

It appears that W. P. A. workers were engaged in the construction of a dam across the Mississippi River. One end of the dam was in Missouri. The other end was in Illinois. The W. P. A. workers in Missouri were paid 40 cents per hour and the W. P. A. workers in Illinois were paid 64 cents per hour for doing identically the same kind of work on the same job, with only the Mississippi River between them. Is that fair? Is that a condition that we should not endeavor to straighten out by having a little further conference between the House and Senate on this question? All that I have said to you heretofore as to the discriminations practiced and all that I am saying now has been in no way substantially challenged as to its truth, either in the House, in the Senate hearings, or on the floor of the Senate.

Remember, all I am asking you to do is to request that these gentlemen, who have done such fine work for the House as conferees, walk back across the Capitol and talk again for 30 minutes or an hour with a few excellent gentlemen from the Senate in an effort to see if they can work out something in reference to this amendment which will to some extent relieve the very bad condition which now exists. Is there anything revolutionary about that? Will the W. P. A. workers in the gentleman's State or anywhere else in the United States be seriously injured in any way if that procedure is followed? I respectfully submit that there is no occasion for such fear. I now yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Do I understand correctly that in referring to these hourly rates of pay the gentleman in the amendment proposed does not refer to the pay per month that is to be received by these people on relief?

Mr. TARVER. That is correct.

Mr. HINSHAW. And if this were changed to read "hourly rates of pay" instead of leaving it as "rates of pay" the situation would be clarified?

Mr. TARVER. Yes. That is the language of the substitute proposal which was considered in conference.

Mr. HINSHAW. Then it would seem that the people in the South who are so unfortunate as to be on relief would have to work less hours to receive the same amount and those in the North who are more highly paid would have to work longer hours to receive the same amount?

Mr. TARVER. There is no requirement in this language that the wages of anybody in the North shall be reduced. It was contended in this matter in some quarters that Colonel Harrington may perhaps construe this language as repealing the prevailing wage section in the present law; however, there is no justification for this position and any lawyer who may have given consideration to that question will agree with me. The prevailing wage rate provision is in section 9 of the Work Relief Act of 1938 and simply fixes as a minimum W. P. A. wage the prevailing rate. There is not anything in the proposed language which will in any way repeal, modify, or alter this provision put into the act of last year. If there should be, through any strained construction any possibility that this language would be held to mean this, then it would be very easy for the conferees to simply insert a provision in conference providing that this amendatory language shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or modify the prevailing wage-rate provision of the act of 1938.

Mr. Speaker, I am not insisting that the House go on record now as insisting that the language of my original amendment shall be written into the law. I am simply contending that the question involved herein is one of such great seriousness, affecting so many hundreds of thousands of American citizens who are not now receiving fair treatment, that it justifies 2 or 3 hours further consideration on the part of these conferees and for this reason I hope the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochan] to recede and concur will be voted down and that the House may then agree with the motion offered by the gentleman from Virginia to have the matter given further consideration. The Senate has asked for a further conference and the Senate has appointed conferees.

It is my judgment, from the investigations I have made of the attitude of certain Senators toward this matter, that a further conference would result in the working out of amendatory language which will be very beneficial to the existing situation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania and Mr. COCHRAN rose. Mr. TARVER. Before I yield, let me read from page 6680 of the Record of the last session of Congress. This is an excerpt from a letter to me by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor. He states:

It therefore occurs to me that the time is opportune to establish a principle of no differentials in wages. When the relief bills are reported to the House the American Federation of Labor will do its utmost to eliminate provisions permitting differentials in wages for relief work.

We are not going as far as the president of the American Federation of Labor states we ought to go. We are not attempting under the language either of my amendment or the substitute proposal to eliminate all differentials. We permit the Works Progress Administration full discretion as to taking into consideration local economic conditions, such as differences in the cost of living or anything else which ought to affect the matter. But we are attempting to take a step in the direction of the correction of a very great injustice, and I certainly hope the anxiety of the House, which is but natural, to complete the consideration of this legislation may not lead the Members to refuse to give the matter further consideration, which is the only effect that would be brought about by adopting the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I take it that as a matter of principle the gentleman favors reconciling the differences in the wage scales of the W. P. A. that exist in various parts of the country?

Mr. TARVER. That is the point I have been endeavoring to impress upon the gentleman.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman then tell me how he reconciles that principle with the fact—and I believe I am correct in stating it—that in the Seventy-fifth Congress the gentleman voted against a minimum wage of $11 for his own section of the country?

Mr. TARVER. No; the gentleman is entirely mistaken. In the course of the debate on the wage-hour bill I indicated my belief that it was necessary that Congress enact some legislation along that line. I would be glad, much gladder than the gentleman would be, to see the standard of wage rates raised in my State and throughout the South.

I opposed the adoption of a drastic proposal which I thought would have and which has had the effect of throwing a great many of my constituents out of employment. That is what I objected to. I did not object to raising their wages where it can be done. But the gentleman cannot consistently want to fix the minimum wage rate throughout the country without any differentials whatever and then insist that in his State of Pennsylvania a W. P. A. worker may be paid $3.03 an hour, as shown by the statistics I put in the Record on the 10th day of January, and yet that in the State of Georgia he shall be paid only 20 or 30 cents an hour.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. May I say to the gentleman that if he can find in Pennsylvania any skilled worker getting $3.03 an hour I will take his job.

Mr. TARVER. It may be possible that the gentleman could not discharge the duties incumbent upon such an employee, but there can be no question, according to the report of the W. P. A. itself, that some workers are being paid at that rate in the gentleman's State.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I do not believe that would be so.

fillers the general fall

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'Connor].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Cochran preferential motion, on the ground that conditions in my State show that this bill should reach the President as quickly as possible. I wish to read the following telegram I received from Helena, Mont., this morning regarding the relief situation in Valley County:

Valley County relief funds exhausted. Also $30,800 emergency expended to date. State Administrator Public Welfare Brandjord stated today not one dollar State money available for general relief. Unemployment at Fort Peck project demands $10,000 immediate relief. Cold winter weather causing hunger and starvation among families who were on Federal pay roll and otherwise during summer months. Everything possible done locally and ask you not to expect a lone county to cope with condition brought about by the enormous Federal project. We have been assured State legislature will provide for future needs but insist the present emergency positively demands your immediate attention. Our board met with State department in Helena today in answer to Glasgow.

N. C. Briggs, Chairman, Carl B. Shellrub, County Commissioners, Valley County.

It is necessary that we have these funds made available at once to assist in meeting a situation caused largely by a Government project at Fort Peck, as shown in the telegram.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the sincerity of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Tarver] led me, I believe, to support his amendment the other day. But having considered the matter since then it seems to me that by the adoption of the gentleman's amendment the prevailing wage situation would be entirely upset, and that this is an attempt to pay more than the prevailing wage existing in certain sections of the country. This brings out what has often been presented before, the difficulty experienced by northern industries in competing with some other sections because of the wage rates prevailing in such localities. Therefore, today I am in doubt, in spite of my great appreciation of the sincerity of the gentleman from Georgia, as to my support of the gentleman's proposition.

However, my chief reason for speaking is to answer the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon]. How can we take 150,000 persons per month off the relief rolls? I believe I can tell the gentleman how, and I have often tried before to express myself on this subject. In my city today, where a tax rate has almost doubled and where the assessed valuation is about one-half the amount of what it was a very few years ago, they are unable to furnish materials for useful projects, so have to accept W. P. A. projects that are not particularly beneficial in themselves. This seems to be the only way they can take advantage of the W. P. A. allotments. Let me again lay this thought before you: Take relief away from the towns and cities that have a tax rate of less than $20 and need for relief and allied purposes less than 3 percent of such amount and give it to the needy municipalities such as I have described. Stop trying to create jobs for W. P. A. workers in rich communities simply because it will make votes for the Democratic Party. There seems to be no other reason except its political significance. I have tried to express myself before on this matter. Nothing has been done about it, but it is an absurd thing to give this money to places that can well take care of their own relief problems. We should not let them take advantage of us and increase our dangerous public debt. I again ask why you do not do something about it. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I have requested very little of this House during my service here, and in the interest of fairness and in the name of common justice I appeal to the membership of this House to return the Tarver amendment to conference.

Mr. Speaker, we might at least give the conferees an opportunity to give the workers in my section at least the minimum wage as enacted by the Congress at the last session.

There is no one I know of who desires at this time to disturb the prevailing wage provisions, but there will be no prevailing wage provision disturbed, Mr. Speaker, because there is none in practice. If you will read the hearings, you will see the testimony of Colonel Harrington, the present W. P. A. Administrator, to the effect that in establishing the present wages in the different communities the matter was left entirely in the hands of the local administrators. Therefore you have 3,000 different wage scales in the 3,000 counties of the United States.

The idea prevails, Mr. Speaker, and, I presume, is the justification in the minds of many Members of this House, that while the larger cities receive the greater part of the money under W. P. A., the farmers of the South are receiving their money through the farm program. I can find no other way in which a conscientious Member of this House can justify opposition to the Tarver amendment, but, as an illustration, Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a report from Mr. Alexander, of the Farm Security Administration. The Farm Security Administration grants are the next thing to the W. P. A., because there those in need are given a grant, and I dare say that 99 percent of this House at this moment think that the South is being taken care of in F. S. A. grants. Well, here are the figures:

F. S. A. last year gave $22,000,000 in grants, according to the report of Mr. Alexander.

Of that $22,000,000, the 11 Southern States combined received exactly $1,028,000—out of the $22,000,000 given in grants to needy farmers.

Now, where did the money go? Five States—hear mefive States received $18,221,000 of the total of $22,000,000. The first State benefited was Kansas, which received $1,300,000. I have not heard of a drought down in Kansas. The next State was Montana, $1,489,000. Each one of them received more than the combined 11 Southern States. Nebraska received $2,188,000, or twice as much as the South received, and even then I understand the farmers of that State, many stricken by drought, received only $20 per family. North Dakota received $6,954,000, or six times as much as all the Southern States combined, and South Dakota received $6,230,000, giving the five States a total of $18,221,000 of the total of $22,000,000, while the combined Southern States received only $1,028,000.

Now, let me say I do not know what to do. I know my people are in need. The report of the President's committee picturing economic conditions in the South was terrible, and much of it is true. Many of our people are not making the bare necessities of life, and yet we come here and hear these men from these great cities—the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Missouri—tell us that we must not approve this amendment because it might disarrange things. My God, how can we improve the condition of our people when every time we ask for fair treatment the answer is, "No, no; you are going to change or disrupt things."

An examination of the records show that the administration of W. P. A. has been and is now unfair and discriminatory. It is supposed to help the needy and improve the economic condition of the least fortunate.

Look to the report of the President's committee on economic conditions in the South. You will find that the most prosperous State in the South is in much worse condition than the least prosperous State outside of the South. You will find that our farmers have an average income of $186 per annum, while the average for farmers outside of the South is over $500 per annum.

Does the W. P. A. Administrator give any consideration to this? Apparently not; but instead he seems to operate under the old rule of "to those who hath shall be given and those who hath not shall be taken away that which they have."

Here is a table showing the per capita income by States for the years 1929 to 1935:

TABLE 5.—Per capita accountable income received, 1929-35

Geographic regions and States	1929	1930	1931	1932	1933	1934	1935
United States	$652	$587	$485	$372	$353	$399	$432

Bearing in mind the States having the highest and lowest per capita income, now consider this table which shows that, almost without exception, the States with the highest per capita income, where a person's income is the most, are given the highest per capita of W. P. A. funds, and the States with the lowest income are given the least.

JU. S. Bureau of the Census estimate as of July 1, 1937. Let U. S. Senate, Committee on Appropriations, hearings on H. J. Res. 83, 76th Cong., 1st sess., pp. 115-118.

Do these facts bear out the claim of "equal treatment for all," which we hear so much about? Of course not, but just the reverse.

Now, I have one other table which deserves your attention. And may I say here, Mr. Speaker, that these tables were secured from official sources by the junior Senator from Georgia, the Honorable RICHARD B. RUS-SELL, and were used by him in his address in the Senate last Saturday in support of this Tarver amendment.

This table shows that the States receiving the greatest amount of W. P. A. money are required to put up the smallest percentage of sponsor's contribution. It is hard to believe, but here are the figures.

Source: Federal funds represent voucher payments reported by the Treasury Department, sponsors' funds based on Works Progress Administration State office reports of sponsors' certifications.

You will observe that the towns, cities, and counties in my State must pay 19.2 percent of the cost of a project, while in New York they were required to put up only 11.6 percent, in Pennsylvania only 10.1 percent, in Massachusetts only 13.2 percent, in Ohio only 12.9 percent, and in Delaware only 13.1 percent.

The pending amendment, offered by Judge Tarver, of my State, merely seeks to correct these inequalities by providing that wages for the same class of work shall not vary in any part of the Nation over 25 percent, which is certainly more than sufficient to take care of any difference in the cost of living. As the following table shows, the present variation is not justified and is wholly unfair to the people of my section of the country.

You notice that the wage scale for unskilled labor starts with a low of 18 cents per hour in Tennessee, 20 cents per hour in Georgia, and runs up to a high of $1 per hour in Wisconsin and $1.02 per hour in Illinois. And for professionals it climbs to a high of $3.03 per hour, or over $24 per day, in Pennsylvania. I do not understand how any man with a conscience could take the people's tax money, set aside for relief purposes, and pay any man $24 per day for relief work. It makes me wonder where we are going and what the end will be.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the pending motions.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia and Mr. Cochran) there were—ayes 104, noes 100.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and eight Members present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran].

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 252, nays 140, not voting 40, as follows:

MILITARY POLICY OF UNITED STATES

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen who have special permission to speak today have indicated to me that they would not object to a unanimous-consent request, which I make at this time, to address the House for 4 minutes in a short statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, it would appear that controversy is developing in connection with the so-called national-defense program and its consideration, and unless certain questions are cleared up it is going to be difficult for the Congress as a whole to act intelligently on this important problem. Moreover, it will be equally difficult for the people of the country to comprehend just what our situation is. Controversy as a rule is the result of misunderstanding or the lack of understanding.

May I take the liberty of repeating a short statement which I as a member of the minority of the Military Affairs Committee made here on Tuesday to this effect:

I think it safe to say that our chief responsibilities at the mo-I think it safe to say that our chief responsibilities at the moment are, first, to understand, if we can, what our foreign policy is and what it should be. Second, what our fixed policy for defense should be; and finally, to examine the President's proposal, or, rather, the President's proposal as cut down by the War Department, in order to determine whether the program meets the demands of the fixed policy of defense.

I want now to say a word about that portion of the program pertaining to the War Department as it is being currently presented to the various congressional committees. I think it safe to say that it is generally a reasonable program, having to do with a proper defense of what we look upon as the continental United States. I refer to the general arear including Alaska, Hawaii, the west coast, Panama, the Caribbean, and our eastern seaboard. Moreover, it has only to do with what we term our present Regular Army—including the Air Corps-with some slight additions and the National Guard. If speaking professionally this would be referred to as the initial protective force of approximately 400,000 men. To be sure, there may be some question about various items of the program, for example, when, how, and in what quantity certain items of the military program should be acquired, but I believe it to be true, and perhaps for the first time in our history, that today we find the War Department, manned by professional soldiers, asking less of the Congress than was urged by the Executive head of our Government, a civilian.

This brings me to my point—what was the President's original request? Who drafted it? Is there a copy of this draft? What was behind it all? If he asked for 10,000 to 15,000 or 20,000 planes, what was to be done with them? Gentlemen of the House, I think these questions should be answered to remove a lack of understanding of our present situation having to do with our international relations and what our defense policy should be.

There is one man today reputed to know of the President's original proposal. It is the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Johnson. Members of the Military Affairs Committee on the minority side have asked that he be heard by the committee. We believe he should be able to answer these questions. He is reputed to be the President's public exponent of the original proposal, and I hope the chairman of the committee will not close the general hearings on this important proposal until Mr. Johnson has had an opportiunty to answer these questions. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, on Monday last I asked unanimous consent to extend my remarks by publishing an address of Judge John J. Parker, of the fourth circuit. I was informed that I would have to get the cost from the Printing Office. That I have done; it amounts to $180. I ask unanimous consent again to have this published in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by including a commencement address by my predecessor, Mr. Brunner.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on legislation pertaining to Puerto Rico. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by incorporating an address on foreign affairs delivered yesterday by the Honorable Herbert Hoover.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the Members of the House who have special orders, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, in order to keep the record straight, and speaking for myself, I would like to say that, as far as I know, no member of the Committee on Military Affairs opposes the appearance of the Assistant Secretary of War or anybody else who desires to be heard on the proposed military program.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. Repeated requests have been made to hear Mr. Johnson, and either he does not desire to come or the President will not let him come.

Mr. THOMASON. I do not know anything about that angle of it, but I am sure the gentleman will agree that there have been open hearings for 2 weeks and an invitation for all persons interested in national defense, either for or against, to appear. The chairman arranges for the appearance of witnesses, and I am not sure that the hearings are yet finally concluded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to announce that the gentleman from Washington, Mr. LEAVY, is absent on account of illness.

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, February 22, immediately after the disposition of the matters on the Speaker's desk, some Member, selected by the Speaker, be designated to read to the House Washington's Farewell Address.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein an address on the Civil Aeronautics Authority by Col. Edgar S. Gorrell.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks, made earlier in the day, and include therein certain charts showing the payment of W. P. A. wages.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I make the further request to revise and extend my remarks and include an address by the president of the Cotton Textile Institute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

EXPLANATION OF VOTE

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, on the vote on the Cochran amendment I was unavoidably detained from the floor, though I was in the Capitol. Had I been present, I would have voted "no."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and include an editorial from the Pittsburgh Press entitled "No Comeback With

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Shanley] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I rise to direct the attention of this great House to the celebration that is scheduled for this year on the 12th of June in Cooperstown, N. Y. It is the occasion for the one hundredth anniversary of baseball. I have introduced a bill to commemorate this—not to make it a permanent national holiday but to pay tribute this year—the centennial of our national pastime.

Baseball has created the American ideal of clean, hard play. Baseball is America's game—American in origin, American in spirit, American in its appeal to player and fan. Born 100 years ago, it grew to be the Nation's game, its favorite sport and spectacle.

Baseball demands skill, dash, and pluck, calm nerve in the face of crises. It has perhaps contributed more than any other activity to the development of the American temperament. Through its outlet for the energies and enthusiasm of player and spectator alike and in its teaching of hard play but fair, it has been the Nation's safety valve and its insurance against excesses now prevalent among other nations abroad.

Any Biblical student will remember the exaltation of athletics from the Epistle to the Corinthians:

Know ye not that they who runneth in the race-ground, all run indeed, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain. And everyone who striveth for the mastery restraineth himself from all things, and they, indeed, that they may receive a perishable crown: But we an imperishable. I therefore so run, not as an uncertainty: I so fight, not as one beating the air but I chastise my body, and bring it under subjection.

Every nation has realized to the fullest the training in fundamentals that sport instilled among the ancients. The tales of valor of Spartan athletes are known to every schoolboy. Mighty Homer himself has left us an immortal couplet:

For no fame may a man win better the while he hath his life, Than from what his feet have accomplished or his hands amidst the strife.

Someone has said that the Battle of Waterloo was won on the playing fields of Eton. It might well be said that the historical military virtues of America's sensible descipline, and leadership, were taught on the athletic fields of America. No troops during the World War ever exhibited so much initiative as our own. We can well be proud of our athletic prowess and the contribution it has made to America.

If divisions in religion in this country have forced toleration as one great student believes and if the very confusion of our common law has taught us that our best safeguard is the independence and integrity of our judges we may well add that our principles of sportsmanship have never betrayed these manly virtues.

Shane Leslie, the Anglo-Irish author, has said that-Modern sport, thanks to the Celtic blend, keeps the mean between the torture of animals and humanitarianism. The unwritten law of sport was gradually established that the pursued must be allowed a chance to escape. That big game have to be killed in the swamp rather than in the arena. The true sportsman prefers to miss a difficult quarry rather than slay an easy one.

With those great principles of sport he added a definition that a "sportsman is one who takes his chance when he ought and not when he can." He shall not aim at the sitting bird nor strike the fallen boxer. Baseball has these ideals.

American baseball develops good men. It instills in boys and young men the qualities for success in American life. Baseball requires virility, courage, sagacity, energy, and determination. Witness the brilliant array of statesmen, preachers, engineers, physicians, and merchants who have graduated from the ball fields of our town lots, schools, and colleges.

Baseball's hundred years of history provide as dramatic and as American a story as the struggles of the Puritans or the conquest of the West.

The chroniclers report that President Lincoln received notice of his nomination while playing baseball with the neighborhood men and boys.

Afterward there came the Civil War to interrupt peacetime baseball, but the game, a hardy infant, continued in wartime on tented fields and behind the stockades of Army prisons. Both Union and Confederate troops were playing the game. Here it became truly American, for, according to Army tradition, the soldiers of both forces laid aside their arms while a series of games was played between picked teams from the Union and Confederate Armies—yes, sublimely, typically American.

With the demobilization of the Blue and the Gray the soldiers headed homeward, carrying baseball to the farthest corners of America. It caught on everywhere. Baseball teams sprang up in every town and village and each team was loudly and proudly supported by its home folks.

Here in Washington the interest of our Presidents and Vice Presidents is known to everyone.

The saga of American baseball is a thrilling part of our national history, an integral section of our development as a people and a power. Courageous, far-sighted Americans took the game abroad to show the world, and from those visits mutual benefits have been derived.

The National Baseball Centennial Commission, created to honor the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of our national game, has attracted some of the greatest figures in this country. I am privileged to cite the roster of the national commissioners who are lending support to this great national birthday celebration:

Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, who is chairman; Ford Frick, president of the National League; William Harridge, president of the American League; John A. Heydler, former president of the National League; L. G. McEvoy, radio director of the American League; the Honorable W. G. Bramham, president of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues; George M. Trautman, chairman of the executive committee of the National Association; Sanford Bates, director of the Boys Clubs of America; Maj. Gen. Thomas Holcomb, Commandant of the United States Marine Corps; Stephen F. Chadwick, national commander of the American Legion; C. O. Brown, executive vice president of the Athletic Institute; Admiral William D. Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations; Neville Miller, president of the National Association of Broadcasters; Claude J. Peck, Jr., president of the I. C. A. A. A. A.: Alexander Cleland, secretary of the National Baseball Museum; George M. Cohan, author, actor, and playwright; Gen. John J. Pershing; Gen. Malin Craig, Chief of Staff of the United States Army; John W. Studebaker, Commissioner of the United States Office of Education; George H. Davis, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce: J. Taylor Spink, publisher of the Sporting News; Charles J. Doyle, president of the Baseball Writers' Association; Eugene I. Van Antwerp, commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

This honorable commission is now directing the Nationwide sweep of baseball centennial celebrations. Every hamlet, village, town, and city of this Nation will be made conscious of the greatness of our national game. Radio, motion pictures, and the press will all tell the story of baseball's century of achievement.

On June 12 the greatest stars of today from the 16 teams of the 2 major leagues converge upon little Cooperstown to honor the stars of yesterday. There on this day the National Baseball Museum and Hall of Fame will be dedicated to the everlasting glory of our Nation. A cavalcade of baseball will be presented to again tell the story of America's past century and the part played in these tenscore years by baseball. We here even in these trying days should do our share.

Throughout the entire world today American baseball is the personification of sportsmanship, team play, fair play, and Americanism. Behind the bivouacs of the Civil War, on every peaceful Main Street, hard by the lethal cannon in Flanders Fields, and in huge sun-flooded stadia baseball brought everliving hours of thrills and pleasure and relaxation to countless millions. The printed page and the spoken word over the radio have given the game a following through history unrivaled in sport annals.

For a hundred years it has been America's pastime—and passion. For a solid century it has brought despair to Mudville, joy to Middletown. This year Uncle Sam is giving a gigantic birthday party to baseball. It is everybody's game, everybody's party. Let all America rejoice and thank God for a game that for 100 years has built Americanism. Let this Congress pay official tribute to our national game by naming June 12 as National Baseball Day.

But it is the day we celebrate that concerns us. From that colorful epochal figure, A. G. Spalding, in his immortal classic, America's National Game, I am taking an account of the early annals of the game. I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks at this point and include this famous version.

I quote from the book:

I have no intention, in this work of reopening the discussion which waxed so warm a short time ago, as to the origin of the game. It would be an act of disloyalty to the commission that was appointed at my suggestion in 1907, with instructions to consider all available evidence and decide the case upon its merits, were I ever again to enter upon the details of the vexed controversy—except in order to prove the righteousness of the verdict then rendered. It is quite enough here to say that the commission referred to, after a long, thorough, painstaking investigation of all obtainable facts, unanimously declared:

First. That baseball had its origin in the United States; Second. That the first scheme for playing it, according to the best evidence obtainable to date, was devised by Abner Doubleday, at Cooperstown, N. Y., in 1839.

The commission rendering this important decision was composed of such able and well-known friends of the game as Mr. A. G. Mills, of New York, an enthusiastic ballplayer before and during the Civil War and the third president of the National League; Hon. Arthur P. Gorman (since deceased), ex-Senator of the United States from Maryland; Hon. Morgan G. Bulkeley, ex-Governor and later United States Senator from Connecticut and the first president of the National League; Mr. N. E. Young, of Washington, D. C., a veteran ballplayer and the secretary, and afterward the fourth president of the National League; Mr. Alfred J. Reach, of Philadelphia, and Mr. George Wright, of Boston, both well-known businessmen and two of the most famous ballplayers in their day; Mr. James E. Sullivan, of New York, president of the Amateur Athletic Union, accepted the position of secretary of this special commission.

The report of the commission, written by Mr. A. G. Mills, and bearing date December 30, 1907, is signed by all the members named above, except Hon. A. P. Gorman, whose death occurred while his colleagues were engaged in the work of research. The report closes with these words:

As I have stated, my belief has been that our national game of baseball originated with the Knickerbocker Club, organized in New York in 1845, and which club published certain elementary rules in that year; but in the interesting and pertinent testimony for which we are indebted to Mr. A. G. Spalding appears a circumstantial statement by a reputable gentleman, according to which the first known diagram of the diamond, indicating positions for players, was drawn by Abner Doubleday in Cooperstown, N. Y., in 1839. Abner Doubleday subsequently graduated from West Point and entered the Regular Army, where, as captain of artillery, he sighted the first gun fired on the Union side (at Fort Sumter) in the Civil War. Later still, as major general, he was in command of the Union Army at the close of the first day's fight in the Battle of Gettysburg, and he died full of honors at Mendham, N. J., in 1893. It happened that he and I were members of the same veteran military organization—the crack Grand Army Post (Lafayette), and the duty developed upon me as commander of that organization to have charge of his obsequies and to command the veteran military escort which served as guard of honor when his body lay in state January 30, 1893, in the New York City Hall, prior to his interment in Arlington.

In the days when Abner Doubleday attended school in Cooperstown it was a common thing for two dozen or more schoolboys to join in a game of ball. Doubless, as in my later experience, collisions between players in attempting to catch the batted ball were frequent, and injury due to this cause, or to the practice of putting out the runner by hitting him with the ball, often occurred.

I can well understand how the orderly mind of the embryo West Pointer would devise a scheme for limiting the contestants on each side and allotting them to field positions, each with a certain amount of territory; also substituting the existing method of putting out the base runner for the old one of "plugging" him with the ball.

True, it appears from the statement that Doubleday provided for 11 men on a side instead of 9, stationing the 2 extra men between first and second, and second and third bases; but this is a minor detail, and, indeed, I have played, and doubtless other old players have, repeatedly with 11 on a side, placed almost identically in the manner indicated by Doubleday's diagram, although it is true that we so played after the number on each side had been fixed at 9, simply to admit to the game an additional number of those who wished to take part in it.

wished to take part in it.

I am also much interested in the statement made by Mr. Curry, of the pioneer Knickerbocker club, and confirmed by Mr. Tassie, of the famous old Atlantic club of Brooklyn, that a diagram, showing the ball field laid out substantially as it is today, was brought to the field one afternoon by a Mr. Wadsworth. Mr. Curry says "the plan caused a great deal of talk, but, finally, we agreed to try it." While he is not quoted as adding that they did both try and adopt it, it is apparent that such was the fact; as, from that day to this, the scheme of the game described by Mr. Curry has been continued with only slight variations in detail. It should be borne in mind that Mr. Curry was the first president of the old Knickerbocker club, and participated in drafting the first published rules of the game.

It is possible that a connection more or less direct can be traced between the diagram drawn by Doubleday in 1839 and that presented to the Knickerbocker club by Wadsworth in 1845, or thereabouts, and I wrote several days ago for certain data bearing on this point, but as it has not yet come to hand I have decided to delay no longer sending in the kind of paper your letter calls for promising to furnish you the indicated data when I obtain it, whatever it may be.

Yours very truly,

A. G. MILLS.

We, the undersigned members of the special baseball commission, unanimously agree with the decision as expressed and outlined in Mr. A. G. Mills' letter of December 30, 1907.

MORGAN G. BULKELEY, NICHOLAS E. YOUNG, A. J. REACH, GEORGE WRIGHT. Senator Bulkeley, after affixing his signature, appended the

I personally remember as a boy in East Haddam, Conn., before 1846 playing the game of "one and two old cat," and remember with great distinctness the early struggles in Brooklyn, N. Y., between the two rival clubs, the Atlantics and Excelsiors, and later the Stars, with Creighton as pitcher. This was some 10 to 15 years before the national organization. I was present, representing the Hartford club, at the formation of what is now the National League, at the Grand Central Hotel, Broadway, New York City, about 1875 or 1876, and was its first president, with Nick Young, secretary.

Accepting the decision of the commission appointed to consider the subject of the origin of baseball as final, I have nothing to add to their report. However, it is quite in keeping with the purpose of the story of our national game to present here a brief biography of the man who first perfected the system out of which the greatest of all out-of-doors pastimes has had its evolution. The following sketch is from Appleton's Encyclopaedia of American Biography:

Maj. Gen. Abner Doubleday was born in Ballston Spa, N. Y., June 26, 1819. He was a civil engineer in 1836–38, when he was appointed 26, 1819. He was a civil engineer in 1836-38, when he was appointed to the United States Military Academy, and on his graduation, in 1842, was assigned to the Third Artillery. He served in the First Cavalry during the Mexican War, being engaged at Monterrey and at Rinconada Pass during the Battle of Buena Vista. He was promoted to first lieutenant March 3, 1847, to captain March 3, 1855, and served against the Seminoles in 1856-58.

He was in Fort Moultrie from 1860 until the garrison withdrew to Fort Sumter on December 26 of that year, and aimed the first run fired in defense of the latter fort on April 12, 1861. He was gun fired in defense of the latter fort on April 12, 1861. He was promoted to major in the Seventeenth Infantry on May 14, 1861; from June until August was with General Patterson in the Shenandoah Valley; and then served in the defense of Washington, com-manding forts and batteries on the Potomac. He was made brigadier general of Volunteers on February 3, 1862, and was assigned to the command of all the defenses of Washington on the same date, and commanded a brigade on the Rappahannock and in the northern Virginia campaign from May to September 1862, and including the second Battle of Bull Run, where he succeeded, on August 30, to the command of Ratch's division. In the Battle of Antietam his division held the extreme right and opened the battle, losing heavily but taking six battle flags. On November 29, 1862, he was promoted to major general of Volunteers. He was at Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville and succeeded Gen. John F. Reynericksburg and Chancellorsville and succeeded Gen. John F. Reynolds as chief of the First Corps when that officer was appointed to the command of a wing of the army. On July 1, 1863, took command of the Gettysburg field until the arrival of General Howard some hours later. His division fought gallantly in the battle that followed, and on the third day aided in the repulse of Pickett's charge. He was brevetted colonel in the Regular Army on March 11, 1865, and brigadier and major general on March 13 for his services during the war. In December 1866 he was in command at ices during the war. In December 1866 he was in command at Galveston, Tex.; served as assistant commissioner of the freedman's bureau there until August 1, 1867, and after being mustered out of the Volunteer service was made colonel of the Thirty-fifth Infantry, September 15, 1867.

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, all of us are faced with trying decisions on many legislative fronts. All of us have every available minute occupied, yet I would feel that I had failed in my duty to a sport and an industry that has done much for America did I not offer this humble effort to the celebration. May I say that I could not even do this were it not for the able assistance of Steve Hannigan, of the baseball centennial commission, whose suggestions and material have been both invaluable.

I cannot close without pointing out to my colleagues that there is certainly one man in this House who knows baseball history from the enfilading eighties to these dying thirtiesone who touched shoulders with the immortal monoliths of old Chicago, Anson's Colts, certainly one of the immortal sons of baseball. That man is the dean of our House, the Honorable Adolph J. Sabath. He saw those herculean giants whose deeds grow greater as time expands—the colorful Adrian C. Anson himself, the one and only Mike Kelly, the mighty Williamson, and the others; a team that Billy Sunday said could whip any nine in history-all stars.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker and my colleagues. Let us honor all of them in this celebration, but, above all, let us commemorate the American spirit of baseball, our national game. [Applause.]

GRAIN FUTURES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Burdick] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, when I introduced House Resolution 25 I did not do so for any formal show, but to get action on a very vital necessity to a just regulation of grain exchanges in the interests of both producer and consumer.

The substance of what I want to accomplish is contained in the first paragraph of the concluding resolution, reading as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House, with all convenient Resolved, That the Speaker of the House, with all convenient speed, appoint seven Members of the House as a Select Committee on Futures Trading to investigate and report to the House, within 3 months, its findings and recommendations for further legislation as to futures trading in contract markets, with reference especially, but not exclusively, to short selling and margin requirements, and as to alleged violations of the Commodity Exchange Act, with reference especially, but not exclusively, to wash sales, cross trades, accommodation trades, and fictitious sales.

When we consider that the purchasing power of a dollar, loaded down with interest and taxes, and the price of farm products, the farmers are now receiving the lowest price in the history of the Nation. Between a reduced dollar and erroneous farm program that attempts to make forced scarcity, the farmer is caught and the situation is crushing him. When we have hungry millions, Henry Wallace forces farmers to cut down production to the end that what can be raised can be sold to good advantage to those who are too poor to buy at any price. Such an enigma cannot be explained by Henry Wallace or anyone else. The people I am thinking about are those farmers in my State and other States who are too poor to pay interest, too poor to pay taxes, too poor to pay any debts, and too poor to obtain the necessities of life.

Theories may be all right in their place, but a farmer cannot live on theories.

The Congress passed the Commodities Exchange Act in 1936, and under it, as amended in 1938, Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Attorney General constitute the Commodities Exchange Commission with power to control the various exchanges of the country and to carry out the provisions of the law. which reads:

and sudden or unreasonable fluctuations in the prices thereof frequently occur as a result of such speculation, manipulation, or control, which are detrimental to the producer or the consumer and the persons handling commodities and products and by-products thereof in interstate commerce, and that such fluctua-tions in prices are an obstruction to and a burden upon inter-state commerce in commodities and the products and byproducts thereof and render regulation imperative for the protection of such commerce and the national public interest therein.

This act was not passed by economists—it was sponsored by the producers and their representatives. The main purpose of the act so far as the producers were concerned, was to limit speculative short selling, particularly in the grain and cotton exchanges. The producers thought that the gamblers in the board of trade at Chicago had taken about enough money out of the producers' pockets.

To my surprise and to the surprise of thousands of others, this act, as administered by the Commodity Exchange Commission, has not only failed to stop speculative short selling, but has actually condoned and assisted in its continuation.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. MASON. Does not the gentleman from North Dakota believe that Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and the board of trade in Chicago, with the short sellers that control that board, have depressed farm prices to such an extent that all the money they have asked the Congress for to benefit the farmers of this Nation has practically been wasted; and did we not believe when we passed the Commodity Exchange Act that we had stopped that pernicious action?

Mr. BURDICK. I will try to answer that, because it is a double-barreled question; but in the main I will say the gentleman is correct. As to the result that followed, I think I will come to that in just a short time. It will answer the gentleman's question.

LXXXIV-

In 1937 to 1938, of the total sales of wheat in Chicago only fifteen one-hundredths of 1 percent resulted in the delivery of actual wheat; in the period from 1938 to the present time only eleven one-hundredths of 1 percent of total sales have resulted in the delivery of actual wheat. In other words, 99.89 percent of the sales transactions have been the sales of future contracts in all of which there was absolutely no intention of making delivery.

It must be remembered that there are two markets on the board of trade in Chicago, and in other exchanges, a cash market and a futures market. Another point to remember is that during the last 3 days of each option period, whether it be May or December, there is no futures market.

The real injury to the producer in a futures market arises from the fact that the futures market is always fixed by the world price, or the London price, less transportation of our grain and cotton to London. This fixes a price beyond which our American prices cannot go, and we are today just as we were in the days of the Revolution, dominated by England in the price structure of our staple crops.

If there be anyone in the House who can support the proposition of having England determine what prices we shall receive for our products, I wish he would rise in his place and state his position.

The Agricultural Department knows all about these "futures" transactions, and it cannot plead ignorance. They have an office within a stone's throw of La Salle Street, and a representative of this Department sits in at the board meetings of the board of trade. While he does not vote, he at least has full information about all of the transactions going on there. Does the Secretary of Agriculture not know that 99.89 percent of all sales are "futures"? Does he not know that in permitting these transactions that the price of grain is kept down by a London program?

Furthermore, Dr. Duvel is Chief of the Commodities Exchange Administration, and one H. S. Irwin is in the employ of the Administration. Mr. Irwin wrote an article published in the Illinois Law Review in 1937, claiming, in substance, that the futures market was a good thing for the producers and showed the advantages of this sort of market. This article had the approval of this Chief of this same Commodities Exchange Administration, and after being published was distributed from the headquarters of the Commodities Administration's office here in Washington. If these facts are true, and they are, do you not see the necessity of having an investigation as provided for in my resolution?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. How can anyone connected with the Department of Agriculture claim that short selling, where no physical exchange takes place, helps prices?

Mr. BURDICK. It cannot be done.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is not the present low price of grain and cotton due, in a measure, to the short selling, which is clearly a violation of the act?

Mr. BURDICK. It is due in large measure to that.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I thought we passed an act known as the Commodity Exchange Act, under the terms of which short selling was not allowed, and that authority was given to the Secretary of Agriculture to prosecute cases of that kind. Is that correct?

Mr. BURDICK. The Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Attorney General were contituted a commission; that is right.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Does the gentleman contend that we continue to have short selling on the market?

Mr. BURDICK. More than we have ever had.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the Secretary of Agriculture condones speculative short selling on the board of trade in Chicago?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. CULKIN. Can the gentleman tell us who financed the article that this public officer wrote?

Mr. BURDICK. I do not know. Mr. CULKIN. Might I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that to his knowledge I made a rather cursory investigation of the conditions he now complains of, and it appeared from my investigation, from expert opinion, that the grain farmers were losing $300,000,000 a year by reason of the Chicago wheat gamblers.

Mr. BURDICK. I think the amount is much larger than

Mr. CULKIN. And because of the subsequent failure of the Department of Agriculture to enforce the law that this Congress put on the books.

Mr. BURDICK. Let me read what this employee says in the Illinois Law Review:

Actually very few of the contracts are intended to be settled by delivery, and so would be considered as gambling contracts, and hence invalid if they were brought before the courts.

He goes on in this article to say that while those transactions are gambling and did not have the consent of the courts when they were brought before them, that he believes that Congress should pass a law making it lawful to carry on these gambling contracts; and this same Mr. Irwin, before he published this article, had the consent of Dr. Duval.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Did not that article explain fully that the lack of such buying created such a thin market that the result would be worse than if they did not do it?

Mr. BURDICK. I will come to that.

Mr. GIFFORD. Did not that article say that?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. And is the gentleman going to explain to the House the practice of hedging? Does hedging come under that? Has not anyone buying $1,000,000 of something the right to hedge to protect himself, although the goods are never actually transferred?

Mr. BURDICK. Let us understand a little something about hedging. When you have 10,000 bushels of wheat yourself that you have bought and paid for, that is not gambling because you can deliver the wheat, but I am talking about the shoemaker who goes in the wheat pit and sells 10,000 bushels of wheat that he never had and never intends

Mr. GIFFORD. The practice of hedging is very interesting to us. Do not do anything here that will disturb that practice if you do not want to disturb business. If you buy 10,000 bushels of wheat and agree to sell at a definite price if it should be offered, you protect yourself even if you sell at a lower price because you can afford to lose, for you can buy back at the low price. Does the gentleman mean to say that the practice of hedging is not a good thing?

Mr. BURDICK. No. I would say that is a gambling transaction that is very detrimental.

Mr. GIFFORD. And the gentleman would stop it?

Mr. BURDICK. Oh, yes; and I will show the gentleman why.

Mr. GIFFORD. Answer what we shall do about futures.

Mr. BURDICK. Unless the gentleman will let me proceed and explain what I have in mind that answers his question I shall have to refuse to yield, although I dislike to be discourteous to my distinguished friend from Cape Cod.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am so sorry. I am simply a pupil at your feet, sir.

Mr. BURDICK. Good, then you will let me answer you. On the delivery days, which are the last 3 days of the period, and, as I have explained to you, there is no futures marketyou cannot buy any futures the last 3 days of the May period or the December period. On those days there is one market only-a cash market. Now, then, if the man who had sold 100,000 bushels of wheat did not have it when delivery was demanded the last 3 days in the cash market and he had to go on the cash market and buy the wheat to make delivery, no particular damage would be done because the artificial demand created by the buying of this wheat to make the delivery would probably equalize the bad effects of having gone in and sold and pounded the price down; but here is what happens when they get in a jam as they did in 1936: The Cargill Elevator Co. was long on corn: that is, they had purchased corn, and the last 3 days of May, the delivery days, they demanded their corn. The fellows who sold all this corn would be gambling on the price if they had been compelled to walk in on the board of trade at Chicago and buy enough corn on the cash market to fill their contracts. The price of corn then, naturally, would go up; and maybe the benefit to the farmer would have been as much as the detriment had been when they sold it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield. Mr. KNUTSON. All I know about the Cargill case is what has appeared in the newspapers; but, as I understand it, the Cargill people went into the market to buy corn that they had agreed to sell to someone else-to the trade; and so far as they were concerned it was a final operation.

Mr. BURDICK. That is right.

Mr. KNUTSON. But the gamblers who sold them the corn did not have it, had no intention of making delivery when the time came, and, in fact, went to the Secretary of Agriculture and got relief.

Mr. BURDICK. The gentleman is approximately correct. When these men went out and sold short, and did not have any corn, instead of going on a cash market and buying the corn to make delivery, they went before the board of business managers of the board of trade in Chicago, where was sitting a representative of the Department of Agriculture, and this board passed a resolution exempting them from delivery of any corn. They made a settlement there because they said it would disturb business.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota. Mr. KNUTSON. What would have happened if the price of corn had gone down below the price that the Cargill people agreed to pay?

Mr. BURDICK. Then the fellows who had sold it could buy in cheap corn and would have made a lot of money.

Mr. KNUTSON. They would have made delivery then?

Mr. BURDICK. Certainly.

Mr. KNUTSON. As it turned out, the Department of Agriculture stepped in and saved the gamblers up there in the short selling of something that had the effect of depressing the price nearly 20 cents per bushel?

Mr. BURDICK. That is right. I want to say that the Department of Agriculture cannot plead ignorance, because it knows exactly what is going on there with one of its representatives sitting in at these business meetings. I say that the purposes of the law that we passed here in 1936 and amended in 1938, as you and I understood the matter when it was passed, are not being properly administered by the administration now in control, and these gambling transactions which always depress prices are going on now stronger than ever before.

I am not seeking to revolutionize anything. All I am asking, I may say to my friend from Massachusetts, is that a committee be appointed to study these facts and within 3 months report the matter to the House. There cannot be anything wrong with information. As far as I am personally concerned, I will vote for any resolution in this House at any time that will give information to Members of this body.

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan. Mr. HOOK. I agree with the gentleman that these gambling practices should be abolished. Does the gentleman mean to say, however, that just because the Department of Agriculture may have a man over in the Chicago Board of Trade that the Department of Agriculture therefore controls the actions of that board?

Mr. BURDICK. No; I did not mean to convey that impression. I do not think the gentleman was here when I read the law. The law that we passed places a duty upon the Commission to see that this is not done. This Commission consists of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Attorney General, and the Secretary of Commerce, and they in turn have farmed that out to a Commodities Exchange Administration. of which Mr. Duvall is the head, who approved this article which says that we ought to legalize gambling up there.

Mr. TALLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TALLE. I understand my colleague in the other body, Senator Gillette, proposes that the short sellers shall put up some money in their dealings. I understand at the present time they can deal in grain on short sales at a margin of 3 cents a bushel. Suppose they deal in a thousand bushels, and they can deal in that number of bushels, it involves a margin of $30. This is more grain than the average producer raises. Has the Secretary of Agriculture proposed to do anything about a situation that permits a man with $30 to deal in as much grain as a producer raises?

Mr. BURDICK. Evidently the Secretary of Agriculture and this Commission have not done anything about that, because these fictitious sales are larger today than they ever have been in the history of this country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Knutson]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. With reference to the bill introduced by Senator GILLETTE, as I understand the bill, it provides that one dealing in futures must put up a minimum of 25 percent of the value of the lot purchased. Now, that takes us into this field: If you buy corporation securities, you buy with the anticipation of actual, physical delivery of the securities purchased. You are going to pay for those goods when delivered. Therefore it is reasonable to talk about a margin of 25, 40, or 60 percent, we will say, but if we are to permit exchange transactions, either hedging, or buying or selling in any way whatsoever, it seems to me about the quickest way in the world to drive all of these hedging operators out of the market is to say they must put up 25 percent of the purchase price of the lot dealt in, because if that applied on corn, that commodity operator will go to some commodity which is not regulated under the Commodity Exchange Act.

Mr. BURDICK. The purpose of the law that we passed in 1936 and amended in 1938 was to stop the very transactions the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Why should we deal with the Gillette proposition at all?

Mr. BURDICK. I am not talking about the Gillette proposal. I am talking about the conditions that now exist.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the gentleman this question in order to clear up in my own mind his presentation? Does the gentleman object to any and every kind of transaction on the commodity exchange?

Mr. BURDICK. I object to every transaction of any kind in the futures market.

Mr. CRAWFORD. All right. Suppose I purchased, we will say, a million dollars worth of raw cotton for future delivery, the finished contract for which has not yet been consummated, and I desire to hedge my purchase of raw cotton. Does the gentleman object to that kind of a transaction?

Mr. BURDICK. No: because you have the exact number of pounds of cotton in your possession or in the possession of the man from whom you purchased.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That clears up my point, then.

Mr. BURDICK. That covers it exactly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So, when the gentleman refers to gambling transactions, he does not mean to refer to the example I gave above?

Mr. BURDICK. I refer to what every court in the United States that ever had one of these cases before it has decided. I carried one of these cases to the supreme court of my own State, in which the purchases were made by men in town who never raised any wheat. They received credit at the local elevator for these gambling transactions. When they lost, the elevator charged the loss to their accounts. When sued, these defendants set up the gambling transactions as a defense, and the court ruled with them.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. There is all the difference in the world between a short sale where the seller does not contemplate making delivery and a short sale where the seller has bought a commodity he is going to process and protects himself by hedging.

Mr. BURDICK. The real essence of the wrong in futures trading is that the price is determined by the world price, whether or not you have a tariff, and in arriving at the world price the cost of getting our wheat and cotton to London is always deducted. Why can we not have an American market? You had the same thing in the days of the Revolution and rebelled against it, but you do not rebel now.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. LEMKE. Is it not a fact that if this Congress should pass the Farmers' Non-Partisan League cost-of-production bill such gambling would be stopped almost entirely?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes; and I may state to my colleague that is the reason the boards of trade are meeting here in Washington right now and opposing the gentleman's bill.

Mr. LEMKE. And they are doing so mostly by the invitation of the Secretary of Agriculture, who is fighting this kind of legislation and has been fighting it every since the gentleman and I have been Members of Congress.

Mr. BURDICK. Yes, and they have the public believing the cost of living would go up 80 percent if this bill were passed. Thousands will believe their propaganda.

The old stock argument is that when one sells futures and the time for delivery arrives, he must fulfill the contract and buy back what he has sold. In this buying back it is argued that this has a tendency to raise the price as it creates an artificial demand. But let us see what happens, and let us see what the Department of Agriculture condones in their administration of this act.

Let me cite to you a concrete case. In December 1936 the Cargill Elevator Co. held an extensive long position on corn. In other words, they had purchased futures and when the delivery time arrived Cargill demanded the corn. If those who had sold short were compelled to go to the cash market and buy corn to fulfill this futures contract two things would have happened: First, the price of corn would have gone up, probably as much as it went down on these heavy purchases months before. Second, those who had sold short and had to make good would have lost heavily in their gambling transaction. When the delivery day arrived, lo! and behold, the board of trade at Chicago, with the consent and approval of the Commodities Exchange Administration, issued an order relieving the shorts from the obligation to buy in the cash market, and thus they avoided the losses that were due them under this gambling transaction. They were permitted to settle in cash, not for the full amount of their loss, but at a figure arbitrarily fixed by the board of trade.

The Chicago Board of Trade has always been an enemy of the farmers and it is interesting to note that now since there is favorable reaction here among the Members of Congress to put over a cost-of-production program for the producers, that the first ones on the ground to spread gloom over the proposition are the boards of trade of the country. They have already met here in Washington and condemned the plan. Why would they not? Their day of gambling would be over if any such bill passed. The control of our crop-price system by England would be over, and through the power of publicity which they can command, the public will be so far misled as to what this cost-of-production program means that innocent people will ask for the defeat of the bill.

The worst part of this whole matter, as I see it, is that we clothed the Department of Agriculture, Department of Commerce, and the Attorney General's office with power to regulate these futures markets, and instead of doing that the Chicago Board of Trade is actually running this Government function. At least we can agree on this fact: That today there is more selling of "hot air" in the board of trade in Chicago than at any time in its history, and an employee of the Administration, with the consent of his Chief, writes the articles and publishes them in support of what these gamblers are doing. Does not that look as though the board of trade is actually dictating to this Government agency?

If we have a Government agency that is actually condoning and assisting the largest grain gambling outfit in the United States in forcing down prices and taking it out of the pockets of the American producers, the people of this country want to know it. Every day we delay, when the farmers are selling their products for half of the cost of production, is a day which brings the farmers nearer to absolute ruin.

If I can get no report on this resolution within the 40-day period, I shall file a petition with the Speaker of the House and ask for 218 Members of this House to sign the petition and bring the resolution out for full discussion.

We have never been able to control these grain exchanges, but it seems to me, with distress and want all around us, that it should be obvious to all who represent the people in this, the greatest deliberative body on earth, that the wrongs that we know are wrongs should be righted. Why should we sit here and let a few men prosper with the accumulation of useless wealth while the many who toil must lose their homes and become objects of private or public charity? This Government will never go down through anything our enemies from without can do, but we have much more to fear from our enemies within. The Board of Trade of Chicago has always been and now is not only an enemy of the producers, but an enemy of the Government of the United States. The result of their practices is more ruin-ous to the welfare of this Nation than any damage that could be inflicted by the combined fleets of the world. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, my attention was called to an incident which happened in my district and which is happening in many parts of the country at this time. An agreement was reached between the timber workers of that region and the management in the matter of wages and working conditions, and both parties have signed on the line to uphold that agreement.

On the face of it that may not sound important. But to my mind it is one of the mainstays of our democracy. As far back as June 1925, Mr. Marcus M. Marks, who was then president of the Borough of Manhattan, writing for the Monthly Labor Review, which is published by the Department of Labor, had this to say in regard to the labor situation at that time:

The labor problem should be thought out, not fought out. It is just as futile to fight out an industrial dispute as to fight a duel; neither struggle proves anything of real value; equity and justice are not necessarily achieved by the victory. The true end can best be secured not by brute strength, but by fair balancing of the conflicting claims. The main causes of strikes and lockouts and practical methods for their prevention or settlement may well be made the subject of serious study by men and women who realize what great losses may thus be avoided by proper understanding and treatment.

To my mind Mr. Marks has stated in a few words what is one of the fundamentals of democracy, and if the time ever comes when management and labor cannot sit down around the conference table and talk over their differences and come to some mutual agreement and understanding, then democracy shall have come to an end.

It is commonly argued by some that the labor unions of this country are driving a wedge between the worker and the employer and thus creating class consciousness. On looking further into that assertion, it occurred to me that just the opposite was true and instead of creating a class consciousness or class hatred men are meeting and discussing their problems around the conference table, which brings them closer together and puts them on an equal basis.

The outposts of democracy in the world today are France and England. In those two countries the conference table is still in use. The labor unions of those countries and their democratic methods for obtaining their goals is one of the main obstacles to the advance of dictatorship, be it Nazi, Fascist, or Communist. And to those who would deny that right to labor I only want to point out to you that where labor is not free neither do you have free capital, nor free speech, nor freedom of worship.

It is true that labor, during the past few years, has not always been the model child. But in view of what has happened in this Nation during that time, labor as a whole has carried on admirably. Labor has taken it on the chin during the past 9 years and no one can say otherwise. It is only a wonder to me that greater violence has not taken place than actually happened.

There comes to my mind that possibly the prevention of more violence than has existed can be attributed to an agency making its good offices available to labor and management for the settlement of their industrial disputes. This agency to which I refer is the United States Conciliation Service. Many of you will recall that one of the last acts of President Taft before turning over his office to President Wilson was to sign the act creating the Department of Labor.

Section 8 of that act gave the Secretary of Labor authority to appoint commissioners of conciliation in the interest of industrial peace. That Service has been quietly carrying on the work on the basis of getting labor and management to sit down together and, with the advice and counsel of a commissioner of conciliation, to calmly talk over their problems. The work of that agency which I have had an opportunity of looking into has produced more harmonious labor relations than any other branch of Government.

In addition to promoting these relationships between employer and employee, it has worked with the various State boards of mediation—which included such States as Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New York, Wisconsin. Numerous others are contemplating the creation of such a service patterned along our National Service. Such types of labor legislation cannot receive too much support.

In talking of these matters, I think it opportune that I tell you that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the Conciliation Service was involved in 2,319 labor disputes of various nature. Of that number 1,262 were strikes involving 777,735 workers; 422 threatened strikes involving 271,629 workers; 85 were lockouts involving 33,363 workers; and 550 were controversies involving 378,069 workers.

From that it will be seen that 1,460,795 workers and 2,319 employers were assisted during the year in ironing out their disputes.

In addition to the above, 1,912 other situations were successfully brought to an end which includes arbitration matters, conferences, and complaints of every description.

Included in the foregoing the Conciliation Service was directly responsible for having averted 339 strikes involving 230.565 workers through mediation.

In the fiscal year mentioned above there was an increase of 59.4 percent in cases handled over the previous year. That increase, it is believed, was due to labor having been given the right to organize for the purpose of collective bargaining as provided for in the Wagner Labor Disputes Act.

Of the 2,319 labor disputes disposed of by the Conciliation Service 90 percent were terminated on a basis that was mutually satisfactory to labor and management. Also 95 percent of the 4,231 situations referred to the Conciliation Service, Department of Labor, were disposed of in a manner satisfactory to all parties interested.

The worker today is not the same kind of an individual as he was 25 years ago. With the radio at his service and with the automobile to transport him from place to place, the worker is more enlightened today than he ever was. For that reason he is aware of what is happening in other plants and for that reason is demanding the same standards of living he sees elsewhere. It stands to reason, therefore, that labor disputes will be on the increase, and may we always handle them in a democratic manner. The Conciliation Service, United States Department of Labor, and the various State boards of mediation provide that means.

May I add that the Conciliation Service of the Department of Labor lent a grand hand in settling without bloodshed the great sit-down strikes in the State of Michigan? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the disposition of the business on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. Miller (at the request of Mr. Martin of Massachusetts), for 3 days on account of illness.

To Mr. Gregory, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, February 3, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a.m. Friday, February 3, 1939. Business to be considered: Continuation of hearing on H. R. 2531—transportation bill. Mr. George M. Harrison, of the President's committee of six, will be the first witness, and at the conclusion of his statements Mr. R. V. Fletcher, of the American Association of Railroads, will be heard.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives on Friday, February 3, 1939, at 10:30 a. m. for the purpose of continuing the consideration of H. R. 2880, "To authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes," carrying out partially the recommendations of the Hepburn report.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Public hearings will continue Friday, February 3, 1939, at 10 a.m. on social-security legislation in the Ways and Means Committee room in the New House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10:30 a. m. Tuesday, February 7, 1939, on the bills listed below:

H. R. 785, Draft Convention No. 53, officers' competency (BLAND); H. R. 947 (SEGER), H. R. 950 (KENNEDY), H. R. 1639 (BREWSTER), H. R. 1641 (BATES of Massachusetts), H. R. 1799 (MALONEY), H. R. 1805 (HALL), H. R. 2534 (Culkin), H. R. 2641 (DIMOND), H. R. 3210 (CANNON of Florida), H. R. 3216 (SCHAFER OF WISCONSIN), H. R. 3228 (MCCORMACK), H. J. Res. 118 (SHANLEY).

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

381. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV a letter from the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, transmitting definite recommendations (1) as to whether the Federal Government should participate in the construction, improvement, development, operation, or maintenance of a national system of airports, and (2) if Federal participation is recommended, the extent to which, and the manner in which, the Federal Government shall so participate, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII.

Mr. BLOOM: Committee on Foreign Affairs. House Joint Resolution 114. Joint resolution authorizing appropriation for expenses of a representative of the United States and of his assistants, and for one-half of the joint expenses of this Government and the Government of Mexico, in giving effect to the agreement of November 9–12, 1938, between the two Governments providing for the settlement of American claims for damages resulting from expropriations of agrarian properties since August 30, 1927; without amendment (Rept. No. 19). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLOOM: Committee on Foreign Affairs. House Joint Resolution 141. Joint resolution to authorize the appropriation of an additional sum of $1,046,000 for Federal participation in the New York World's Fair, 1939; with amendment (Rept. No. 20). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLOOM: Committee on Foreign Affairs. H. R. 3537. A bill to extend the facilities of the United States Public Health Service to active officers of the Foreign Service of the United States; without amendment (Rept. No. 21.) Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SABATH: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 26. Resolution authorizing the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities, appointed under authority of House Resolution 282, Seventy-fifth Congress, to continue its investigation during the Seventy-sixth Congress; with amendment (Rept. No. 22). Referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1081) granting a pension to Bertha E. Fleming; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1102) granting a pension to Jesse Johnson; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1104) granting a pension to Pharis Johnson; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1112) granting an increase of pension to William O. Scott; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1113) granting an increase of pension to William Hays; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1116) granting an increase of pension to Harlan C. Allen; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1117) granting an increase of pension to William Hargis; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1118) granting an increase of pension to Fred Faulkner; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1136) granting a pension to Fannie Conrad; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1144) granting an increase of pension to John G. Hawkins; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1149) granting an increase of pension to Quessie Burns; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Orris Gravenor Robinson, of the Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church, of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

"God of grace and God of glory, on Thy people pour Thy power." On all Thy people, O God, pour Thy power—the rich and the poor, the wise and the unwise, the weak and the strong, that all may be illumined and quickened to do Thy will.

We are thankful for the vision of the founders of this Nation, for their faith in the power of an omnipotent God. In this day of moral chaos may that vision be lengthened and broadened in these their followers, who have the moral responsibility for the welfare of our loved country.

Grant unto these, Thy servants, the representatives of the people of this Nation, not only insight but the moral courage to act as it is given them by Thee to act.

We thank Thee that Thy spirit still broods over Thy creation; that Thou dost not forsake the Nation that calls upon Thy name. Help us to remember that, though this Nation faces great and ominous problems, Thou art our God and we are Thy people.

Remember, O God, with comforting love the Representative of this body whose son was so suddenly taken from him this day, and forget not his family in their sorrow.

Hear our prayer, O God, we beseech Thee. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record in regard to the lumber tariff and our foreign trade, and to include certain letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record by printing a very short editorial from the Rome News-Tribune, one of the leading papers of my State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. Voorhis of California asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the Record.

COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Tuesday and Wednesday the Committee on Accounts may be permitted to sit during sessions of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I presume this is agreeable to the ranking Republican member?

Mr. WARREN. I have not had an opportunity to talk with the ranking Republican member, but if it is not agreeable, we, of course, will not sit.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes on next Monday after disposition of the business on the Speaker's desk and the legislative program of the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE UN-AMERICAN PROPAGANDA AND ACTIVITIES

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 26 for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 26

Resolved, That the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Propaganda and Activities is authorized to continue the investigation begun under authority of House Resolution 282 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power and authority as that conferred upon it by said House Resolution 282 of the Seventy-fifth Congress and shall report to the House as soon as practicable, but not later than January 3, 1941, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations for necessary legislation.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 8, strike out "1941" and insert "1940."

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOK. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, at this time against the resolution by virtue of the fact that according to Hinds' Precedents, 4403, when a select committee reports in full on the subject committed, it is thereby dissolved, but it may be revived by a vote.

There is one other way that the committee may be revived and that is if any new material had been referred to the committee previous to the time the committee was dissolved.

This committee was dissolved on January 3, 1939, and this resolution provides for a continuance of the committee. You cannot continue that which does not exist, and therefore the only way that this resolution could be considered would be by a direct vote on a revival of the committee and then an authorization for its continuance.

I therefore submit the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COX. The precedents of the House settle the point of order that has been raised. The pending resolution in form is the same as those heretofore employed in continuing committees that had expired by reason of the limitation as to time fixed in resolutions bringing them into being.

The meaning of this resolution is that the same committee heretofore functioning under the original resolution is revived with power in the Speaker, of course, to fill any vacancies that may exist.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman recognizes the fact that no point of order was raised against the resolution that we reported a couple of days ago on the matter of reorganization of the Government.

Mr. COX. The question was brought up and discussed and was met by an amendment that was offered. However, there is a long series of precedents upon identically the same point as the one that has been raised here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Michigan raises the point of order against the resolution on the grounds that the functions and authority conferred upon the select committee by the Seventy-fifth Congress have expired and therefore that the Rules Committee has no authority to report a resolution reviving and continuing the activities of that committee.

The Committee on Rules, of course, is a highly privileged committee. Under the rules of the House it has authority to report on matters of this character. As the Chair understands the resolution, reading the letter and the spirit of it, it provides not only for the continuance of the select committee appointed by virtue of the resolution of the Seventy-fifth Congress, but also for a revival of said committee. In other words, in the opinion of the Chair, the Committee on Rules had the authority, under the rules of the House, to breathe life into this select committee if they saw fit to do so and the resolution was approved by the House.

This is not a new matter. The Chair has not before it immediately the precedents, but in the Seventy-fourth Congress and in the Seventy-fifth Congress similar resolutions were presented. It has been held that the Committee on Rules has the power and jurisdiction to report resolutions similar in character and substance to this. As a matter of fact, the precedent cited by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook], section 4403, Hinds' Precedents, sustains the position which the Chair feels impelled to take. The Chair will re-read that:

When a select committee reports in full on the subject committed, it is thereby dissolved; but it may be revived by a vote.

As the Chair understands it, the purpose and object of this resolution is to revive this committee by a vote in the House. Therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, of the time in my control I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes], to be in turn yielded by him as he desires.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. I want to explain to the House that I have asked the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] to report this resolution. I am so vigorously opposed to the resolution that I cannot in good conscience report it myself. There are a number of other Members who have had no opportunity to be heard on this matter, who strongly desire to be heard, and I ask whether the gentleman who is in charge of the resolution will not agree to at least 1 hour for each side in order that all arguments can be brought before the House?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to make any agreement that would bind the House, but if any gentleman wishes to propound a unanimous-consent request, that would be a matter to be considered.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for consideration of the resolution be extended by 1 hour, the time to be equally divided between those for and those against the resolution.

The SPEAKER. And that the previous question shall be considered as ordered at the end of the 2 hours?

Mr. SABATH. Correct.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time for debate upon the pending resolution may be extended 1 hour, so that there may be 2 hours of debate on the resolution, one-half of which shall be controlled by those in favor of the resolution and the remainder by those in opposition to the resolution, and that at the conclusion of the 2 hours of debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I have no objection to the extension of time. I think the control of the time, however, should be as usual, in charge of the majority side by the gentleman from Georgía [Mr. Cox], who has control of the resolution, and the minority member on this side, to dispose of as we see fit.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to an equal division of the time as between those for and those against. The SPEAKER. The Chair can only submit the unantmous-consent request in the terms in which it is offered.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object though I shall not do so. If the unanimous consent is granted, will that mean that the resolution is open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I wish to propose an amendment to this resolution.

Mr. COX. I regret that I shall not be in the position to yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman would read the amendment, I think that he would agree to it.

Mr. COX. I have read the amendment, and there is much in it that would be considered by the committee if it is revived.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Why does not the gentleman permit me to offer this amendment to the resolution?

Mr. COX. I am sorry, but I cannot yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. In view of the fact that this matter has been under consideration for some time and that every Member of the House has made up his mind how he is going to vote, and that speech making would not change a single vote, I feel constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish anyone to feel that he has been denied the opportunity to express his views on the resolution. May not the gentleman from Illinois submit a request to extend the time for 1 hour? If the time is under my control I shall take pleasure in dividing it equally as between those for and those against.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain such a motion. The Chair will entertain a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request and agree to the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes] in respect to the control of the time.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I object. Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELLER. Do I understand that this resolution as proposed before this House this morning is not subject to amendment?

Mr. COX. Except upon motion of the committee. The committee will offer the amendment disclosed in the report, unless the previous question is voted down.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COX. I yield with pleasure.

Mrs. NORTON. I would like to get some information about

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, it is understood that this is not coming out of the time allowed the gentleman from Georgia?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the time is running.

Mr. COX. I will yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey, in any event.

Mrs. NORTON. My understanding is that this resolution cannot be amended. The only way it can be amended is to vote down the previous question. Then it will be subject to amendment. Am I right?

Mr. COX. That is correct, except as to amendments which the committee will offer.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to move that the time be extended?

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order. The Chair cannot entertain a motion to extend the time, under the rules of the House.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire as to the time that has expired?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 4 minutes. Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 13 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath], to be used by him as he sees fit.

Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution to revive and continue the committee commonly known as the Dies committee, set up to investigate un-American activities. Your Committee on Rules held hearings, extending over 2 or 3 days, hearing every Member of the House who expressed a desire to be heard. A great many appeared and were given full latitude in setting forth their views. The committee came to the conclusion that the work which this investigating committee was set up to do had not been completed, that it was an important work, and that the investigation should be continued.

I do not believe there was a single witness—or, if one, not more than one or two—who opposed the continuation of the investigation. Those protesting the adoption of the resolution put their objections upon the ground that they were dissatisfied with the personnel of the committee as heretofore existing.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say, while I am not here to insist that the committee exercised complete caution in the conduct of its investigation, yet at the same time I am not prepared to concede that the committee is subject to any of the criticism that has been directed against it. I think the committee has been very grossly misrepresented and has been unjustly criticized.

Those objecting have taken the position that the committee has not sat as a purely judicial body, and that they have not observed the strict rules of evidence in receiving testimony. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that the committee is not expected to function as a strictly judicial body, nor is it expected to rigidly observe rules of evidence in the taking of testimony. The chief criticism directed against the committee is that it has permitted people with grievances to appear before the committee and to take advantage of that appearance to direct unfair charges against people throughout the country. I think, Mr. Speaker, that has been done, but I do not consider that the committee is chargeable with the duty of verifying the truthfulness of what is to be said before a witness testifies. The committee, I believe, has endeavored to be fair. Certainly, in the light of the criticism that has been made and the experience had, the committee, if re-created and permitted to continue the investigation, will avoid repetition of any mistakes and will escape the criticism that has heretofore been leveled against it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Taylor].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, in view of the limited time that is allowed for debate, and due to the further fact there are many who would like to register their views on this resolution, I have requested very little time to discuss it myself.

It seems to me that the type and character of the opposition to the Dies committee is perhaps the strongest argument and recommendation for its continuation. I realize there are a great many well-intentioned people who have been misled by false and sinister propaganda, who perhaps feel that this committee has abused some of its prerogatives, but the bulk of the opposition that has been registered against this committee comes from well-known and well-recognized un-American activities throughout this country. From the very outset it has been apparent that an insidious conspiracy was afoot to discredit this committee. In the first instance, they attempted to ridicule it out of existence. Then they resorted to laughter, and finally when they could not win their objective by those methods, they proceeded to smear the committee by abuse, misrepresentation, and billingsgate.

Now, this has not been confined alone to the un-American organizations of this country. Some of the outstanding executive figures of this administration have condescended to resort to tactics in this respect which seem to me beneath the dignity of such figures, attempting to bring this committee into disrepute.

So far as I know, this is the first instance where a special committee of the Congress has been assailed and assaulted by an official of the executive department of the Government. To me this is a very sad and melancholy commentary, and as a rebuke to this reprehensible spectacle this resolution ought to be adopted by a unanimous vote.

Mr. Speaker, this is the third time within the past few days that resolutions have been brought here to extend special committees, and in both of the other instances this House has adopted those resolutions without a dissent. So, Mr. Speaker, why all this hub-bub and commotion and opposition to the Dies committee? Of course, you all know the answer. The answer is that this investigation has "got under the skin" of those subversive influences and their sympathizers who would sabotage the hallowed institutions of our Government and erect on their ruins a system of government of a foreign pattern. After all, Mr. Speaker, the only difference between ultraliberalism and communism is one of degree. If you will visit the offices of the Rules Committee and see the avalanche of telegrams, letters, and post cards that were sent this committee by so-called liberals protesting this resolution, you will have some conception and appreciation of the apprehension which the advocates and sympathizers of these un-American philosophies entertain if this committee is continued. The verity of the old adage that it is always the "hit dog that howls" has been abundantly demonstrated by the bitter fight that has been waged against this resolution. For 3 days socalled liberals of the House used the Rules Committee as a sounding board for their lurid protestations. They clearly showed by their testimony that it was the scalp of MARTIN Dies that they sought, and that nothing short of that would satisfy them.

The methods employed by these radical agents and organizations to discredit the so-called Dies committee has in some instances been both pitiful and ludicrous. For instance, they put out the perfectly amusing story that the committee had charged Shirley Temple with being a Communist. That, of course, was nonsensical to the point of absurdity. Recently, in a further attempt to discredit the committee, they claimed that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] was trying to elect himself President of the United States and wanted to use this $100,000 or $150,000 to advance his candidacy. Of course, I do not know just what ambitions the distinguished gentleman from Texas may entertain, but so far as that is concerned, I think MARTIN Dies would make a better President than some I have seen since I came to Washington 20 years ago-and I do not have in mind Herbert Hoover when I say that. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I myself have had some experience on special committees to investigate un-American activities. I had the honor of serving with the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] on the Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities during the Seventy-third Congress, and I know something of the difficulties and embarrassments which confront committees to investigate these subversive influences. An attempt was made to lambast us and lampoon us, but not to the extent that we witnessed with the Dies committee, because there has been no limit to the abuse and vituperation that has been heaped upon this committee. In my judgment, it has been wholly unjustified. [Applause.]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that to vote down this resolution can only mean a repudiation of this able and courageous committee. It will be hailed with a great hallelujah by every "red" organization in this country, together with their adherents and sympathizers. So far as I am concerned, I refuse to give them this comfort and consolation. I refuse to believe that this House with its proud and illustrious traditions will consent to "run out" on a committee of its own creation-a committee which it is now proposed to crucify because it showed courage and determination in its efforts to expose radicalism in our midst. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that he ask unanimous consent that those who speak have permission to extend their remarks

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact there is evident a desire on the part of the Members to express themselves, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on this resolution. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and it is so ordered. Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, as has been previously stated, this is a resolution to continue for 1 year the special committee, commonly known as the Dies Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities. You will remember 1 year ago the great majority of the Members of this House were of the opinion that there were too much un-American activities in this country. We were of the opinion that something should be done. Accordingly, a resolution similar to the one before us was presented. In compliance with it Speaker Bankhead named this special committee which was composed of five Democratic Members and two Republican Members. In the selection of this committee Speaker Bankhead was very careful and particular. For chairman he selected an outstanding and lifelong Democrat from Texas, Mr. Dies, a Member who has served with distinction in this body for 8 years, an individual that has the respect of every Member of Congress, by reason of his fearlessness, honesty, and ability. Mr. HEALY, of Massachusetts; Mr. Dempsey, of New Mexico; and Mr. Starnes of Alabama, present Members of this House, were also appointed by the Speaker to this committee. There is one vacancy. All of these Members are outstanding Members. They have served the Democratic Party with distinction for many years. They are not new Members of this body. The Speaker, in selecting them, knew them well. Mr. Bank-HEAD selected them because he knew they were fearless, because he knew them to be honest, because he knew they would use every honest effort to lessen the un-American activities in this country. Speaker Bankhead is no novice in the art of selecting committees. He has performed that duty before, and we all admit that he has always done a very good job. What I have stated about the Democratic Members applies equally to the two Republicans on this committee.

My reason in discussing the membership of this committee is this: For the past 3 days certain Members of Congress have come before the Rules Committee attacking the sincerity and the honesty and integrity of the membership of this special committee. Mr. Marcantonio, of New York; Mr. Voorhis of California; Mr. Keller, of Illinois; and others, have come before the Rules Committee emphasizing that Mr. Dies, Mr. Dempsey, Mr. Starnes of Alabama, and others, did not possess the necessary sense of equality and sound judgment. They declared in no uncertain terms that these members of their own party did not have judicial minds and were intemperate in their actions. They stressed that Mr. Dies and others had been working for the benefit of the Republican Party and to the detriment of the Democratic Party and its various candidates. They harshly criticized every action of this committee. The hearings before the Rules Committee totaled approximately 7 hours. Opponents of this resolution were allotted approximately 6 hours of the 7 hours. Eight Members of Congress were heard against the resolution. Mr. Dies was the only one heard in favor of it. At the conclusion 13 out of the 14 members of the Rules Committee favored the passage of this resolution.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Does the gentleman mean to say we said that about the committee or about the chairman of the com-

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois that implications were made in regard to all of the members of the committee.

Mr. KELLER. I deny the inference. I said that about the chairman, not about the committee.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. All right.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question at that point?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman think that what this committee is investigating now, namely, whether there is communism in this country and whether it is spreading, is known to every man and woman throughout the United States without any investigation? Does not the gentleman believe that if this investigation is to be carried on, the causes of communism and its spread should be inquired into as well as the question of whether or not they exist?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I think the committee are doing a good job.

I readily admit that this committee has not functioned 100 percent. What committee ever does? I personally did not agree with the La Follette committee when they confiscated private telegrams and correspondence. In my opinion, the few omissions of this committee can be attributed to lack of funds. Well do I remember a year ago, when this committee came before the Accounts Committee, of which I am a member, requesting $100,000 to properly carry on its work. By reason that it was generally understood the various departments were to come to the aid of the Dies committee, giving clerical help and investigators, the committee was given $25,000 instead of $100,000. Then what happened? Mr. Dies wrote respectful letters to the various departments requesting help, but was refused this necessary aid. Even before the committee had any hearings Cabinet members and others high in official life in Washington began an attack of vilification. Every effort was made to ridicule the work of the committee in the eyes of the public. Mr. Dies stood for these malicious attacks for several months and then, like the true he-man that he is, did a little "snipe" shooting himself. In other words, he took to the radio to justify the work of the committee and to defend it against these unjust and unwarranted assaults.

Much was said before the Rules Committee by Mr. Marc-ANTONIO, of New York: Mr. Voorhis of California; Mr. Keller, of Illinois, that the Dies committee worked for the benefit of the Republican candidates and to the detriment of the Democratic candidates for office during the 1938 elections. I interrogated Mr. Dies on that subject and he emphasized that nothing political entered the committee's work. Any contention that these five lifelong Democrats would be working for the Republican candidates for office is totally absurd. In support of its absurdity I would mention this: I hold here an article written by George E. Reedy, special Washington correspondent to the Philadelphia Inquirer. In the February 2, 1939, issue of that paper it states:

Speaker WILLIAM BANKHEAD (Democrat, Alabama) announced that if the investigation was continued the present Members would be

I ask you, ladies and gentlemen, if you believe that Speaker Bankhead would want to reappoint the present committee if he believed it to be working for the benefit of Republican candidates for office and to the detriment of Democratic candidates?

This resolution should unanimously pass in order that those individuals and those organizations whose intentions are to overthrow our American system of government will know, and know well, that we in Washington will use every means to defeat their purposes; that we in Washington stand ready to fight to the last those who wish to assault our American principles and American institutions.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I now control only 13 minutes, and there are about 25 requests for time. Therefore, I will take just a few minutes myself in order to leave a minute here and there for other Members who wish to be heard against the resolution.

For 32 years it has been my contention that Members of this House should have the privilege given them in the Constitution of voting on bills and resolutions, rather than having legislation buried in committees. I have likewise always insisted that Members be given a fair and equal chance to state their position and express themselves on legislation before the House. That conviction has guided me in my consideration of the resolution now before us. Insisting that those in favor of it have the right to be heard, I reserve the right to speak against it.

I maintain that the special committee created by the original resolution, for which I voted in a firm belief that there should be a thorough investigation of un-American activities, has used the prestige of this Congress to become a medium for partisan attacks upon the Democratic administration, members of the Cabinet, organized labor, and many respected and outstanding citizens. The gentleman from Tennessee stated that the special committee had been smeared. If anyone was undeservedly smeared it was the thousands of loyal and patriotic American citizens who were given no slight opportunity to defend themselves before this committee. I have in my possession as chairman of the Committee on Rules thousands of telegrams and letters from preachers, teachers, organized labor leaders, civic leaders, public officials, veteran leaders, and others against whose organizations and themselves the most vicious insinuations have been made by unreliable and discredited investigators and witnesses of the special committee. I say the use of a congressional committee to give credence and publicity to such baseless charges has been unfair to these thousands of Americans and their organizations. Unfortunately, from the very outset this committee has been led astray and has given widespread publicity to charges made by men who have been later discharged by the committee itself because it was learned that these persons were untrustworthy and undeserving of belief.

Mr. Speaker, for reasons unknown to me, the majority of the Rules Committee have seen fit to disregard the storm of protest raised against continuation of the committee and. ignoring the thousands of pleas for a sober, careful, and deliberate consideration of the resolution now before us, they have insisted upon a hasty and, to my mind, ill-considered report and vote by the House. Even my suggestion that the committee's membership be increased to avoid repetition of the charge of one-man dictatorship was rejected by the gentleman from Texas and a majority of the Rules Committee for reasons I cannot ascertain. I think increased membership would be a healthy thing for the committee and help accomplish all the work the chairman says is unfinished. Is it possible that increased membership might upset the program that the committee has already planned in advance of the action of the House in continuing it?

In all my congressional experience of 32 years, I know of no committee so broadly condemned because of its conduct by people in all stages of life and from all parts of the Nation. No one denies the necessity for a complete investigation into un-American activities as was contemplated when the Congress originally created this committee. But thousands of reliable and outstanding people insist that the committee has been solely a medium to smear political and civic leaders whose views, while being far from communistic, differ from those of the chairman of the committee. I recall a proposal often made by a gentleman in this House in the cloakroom that a demagogue club be formed in Congress and he be the president. I thought this was just humor, but I am seriously wondering now if it was not meant in dead earnest. Certainly thousands of law-abiding citizens and liberal-minded and progressive people who support the President, and even the President himself, have been exposed to the rankest kind of demagoguery by the actions of this committee. And not only that, but in every section of the country Democratic candidates for high office have been falsely and maliciously accused of communistic alinements without a shred of evidence or justification for such baseless charges. Men made these charges while on the pay roll of a committee of Congress and who were later found to be labor spies connected with strikebreaking organizations and groups specializing in the lowest type of character assassination; men whose recklessness with the truth and general unreliability should have been ascertained by the special committee before they were permitted to fill hundreds of pages of the record with their outrageous charges and statements. This was bad enough, but when the special committee permitted itself to be used to allow veiled insinuations against the President to be made, their conduct not only disgusted but was resented by millions of fair-minded citizens of our country.

There is no need to explain why the Republicans favor continuation of the committee. I notice that they are unanimous in their support of this resolution and will undoubtedly vote for it to a man. I cannot wholly blame them for this strictly partisan attitude of utilizing the best opportunity they have had in years for what they hope will continue to cast discredit upon the Democratic Party, its officials, and a Democratic President. But I regret extremely that the Democrats are so short-sighted as to permit themselves to be used for such an unsavory purpose and to have Democratic legislators go to the extent of even refusing a fair chance and opportunity to Members of this House to express their views and submit evidence as to why this instrument of attack on organized labor and the Democratic Party should be stopped now.

Mr. Speaker, I originally supported and voted for the resolution that created this special committee in the belief that I was helping to bring about a real investigation of all the un-American and subversive activities in this country. I was therefore amazed to find out during the course of the hearings before the Committee on Rules that little or none of the original intent of the House had been carried out. Instead I became convinced that this committee had spent its time and money on little less than a "smearing campaign" against all who have tried to promote liberal government and aid in supporting the great humanitarian principles of your President and mine. What about un-American organizations that spread bigotry, class prejudice, and racial hatred throughout this fair land of ours? Were they investigated by the com-Was there any attempt made to find out who finances them and for what purpose? Was Mr. Pelley, of North Carolina, and his Silver Shirts, subpensed and investigated? Was the Republican candidate for Governor of Kansas, Mr. Winrod, investigated? Was Fritz Kuhn brought in and investigated? Were the Black Shirts of Michigan investigated? Oh, no; the committee could not get around to them before their money ran out, and I am wondering why.

It is a strange and distressing coincidence that the enemies of President Roosevelt and the administration will stop at nothing and use any kind of instrument at hand to undermine and try to destroy the confidence of our people in the administration. This is not the first time it has been tried, but it will fail like the others when the people realize who and what is back of these vicious smearing campaigns. How very much like the campaign against our American President now being carried in the Nazi press in Germany, how nearly in the same language are these vicious attacks by the agents of fascism, silver shirtism, nazi-ism, and other "isms" which are given credence and publicity by our ill-advised and misguided special committee. Only today newspapers report our President being called a "Bolshevist tool." Read the special committee's hearings and the press reports about them and see if that does not sound to you like the ravings now being carried in the Hitler press. The headlines in reactionary newspapers accompanying every hearing of this special committee have echoed in substance the vituperations of the German Nazis directed against our great President. I know the administration would not have uttered one word of criticism of the committee if it had felt its work and real purpose was to investigate and expose un-American activities, instead of attacking, libeling, and attempting to intimidate every liberal, progressive, and humanitarian group and person in sympathy with the objectives of our administration to better the conditions and lives of the masses of our people.

History repeats itself sometimes, and I know the future will justify my position and that of all others in this House who refuse to submit to partisan prejudice and political hysteria. No number of attacks on the President and his administration, no matter how cleverly masqueraded or concealed, will detract from his fine reputation and the noble and humane efforts he is making in behalf of our democratic form of government and especially in behalf of the needy and downtrodden for whose condition the greedy and avaricious special interests are responsible and whose agents howl gleefully at every attempt to smear him or those who support him.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that neither my conscience nor my sense of decency will permit me to vote for this resolution. I take the privilege under the leave granted me of inserting a few of the thousands of letters and telegrams which I have received in protest to continuing this special committee, at this point in the RECORD. These protests should satisfy any fair-minded Member that I am doing my duty in opposing the passage of this resolution. I hope, even in spite of my fears, that if the special committee is renewed, it will see a new light and sincerely try to do the job it was intended to do. But like the thousands who oppose its continuance, I go only by its past record, and I urge the Democrats of this House as good Democrats, to put an end to this partisan and political comedy by voting with me against the resolution.

GRAND LODGE BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN, Cleveland, Ohio, January 9, 1939.

Hon. ADOLPH J. SABATH,

Hon. Adolph J. Saeath,

Chairman, House Rules Committee,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Congressman: I take this opportunity to call to your attention the fact that the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen is unalterably opposed to the granting of any additional money to the disreputable Dies committee. That committee should be discharged at once and the task of investigating un-American activity be delegated to Congressmen and Senators of the caliber of the members of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee.

Without listing a separate bill of complaint against the Dies committee the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen endorses President Roosevelt's indictment of the unfair and un-American tactics employed by that committee throughout the course of its investigation and hearings.

with the danger of fascism present and immediate, we cannot afford to be blinded by a smoke screen of unfounded charges and scare headlines emanating from the star chamber of the Dies committee. I for one hope that the House of Representatives will regain the respect of the American citizenry by refusing to countenance further the antics of the Dies committee.

Respectfully yours,

A. F. WHITNEY. President.

We urge you to oppose resolution for continuance of un-American Dies committee.

INDIANA CIVIL RIGHTS COMMITTEE. FRANCES ZINKIN, Secretary.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., January 6, 1939.

The Honorable ADOLPH SABATH, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C .:

Congressman Dies and his committee have failed to investigate the case of Rev. Gerald B. Winrod, of Kansas, and numerous other pro-Nazi and anti-Semitic groups. While an objective investigation of Nazi, Fascist, and Communist groups in the United States is a crying need, it would be a tragedy to carry on that investigation as the Dies committee has proceeded.

Representative Apolph J. SABATH,

Chairman of the Rules Committee,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Sin: This is to protest against continuance of the House Commit-Sign: This is to protest against continuance of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, as provided in the resolution introduced by Representative Dies, of Texas. I hope that those thoughtful citizens who enter protests will be regarded by yourself and colleagues as representative of a larger number who feel such opposition but who have not been moved to write or wire by cleverly conducted campaigns of misrepresentation. Up to date it appears that the Dies committee has confused the real issues and perhaps hampered the work of agencies charged with apprehension of spies and other foreigners guilty of real offenses; it has besmirched the names of leading and patriotic citizens for the sake of political capital and generally contributed to mob hysteria rather than to sound democratic government.

Respectfully yours,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: We are enclosing a resolution adopted by the South Bend Industrial Union Council, representing 25,000 members of organized labor, at our last regular meeting.
Since from the very outset the Dies committee has done nothing constructive, but, instead, has attacked everything progressive and constructive, as is outlined in the enclosed resolution, we therefore urge that the Rules Committee refuse to act favorably on the Dies committee resolution asking for an additional $150,000 to continue their destructive work. their destructive work.

Respectfully yours,

Whereas so scandalous was the mud slinging of the committee that President Roosevelt rebuked it publically on October 25, ironically dubbing it an "un-American committee"; and Whereas from the first days of its hearings, the committee began a Nation-wide "red hunt" with sweeping assaults on members of the Cabinet and liberal New Dealers, provocative charges against the C. I. O., demands for deportation of trade-union leaders, slanders against the private life of the Roosevelt family; and Whereas the American people observed that the new revelations (equal in importance to the discovery that Shirley Temple was a dangerous "red") always seemed to be timed for publication with an eye for maximum effect in the elections in such key States as Michigan, Minnesota, New York, and California; and Whereas New Deal democracy, the modern labor movement launched by the C. Dear Congressman Sabath: I understand that the Dies committee has asked for an appropriation of $150,000 to continue its absurd investigation. Haven't we enough faith in democracy and in the common sense of the American people not to be afraid of the sputtering of a few thousand Communists and Fascists? It seems to me that there are far too many things that need money to waste our resources on this sort of futile investigation. It makes good headlines for Mr. Dies, but he and the other Congressmen can serve our country better by working on the really serious problems that confront us, and not wasting their time and the taxpayers' money on witch hunts. If there are actual criminal conspiracies, let our very efficient G-men ferret them out under the Department of Justice, instead of dragging citizens before a congressional committee to explain why they have exercised their rights as citizens in a free country in belonging to various organizations or expressing their opinions. opinions.

Thomas Jefferson once said: "Here we shall follow truth wherever it may lead, nor fear to tolerate error as long as reason is left free to combat it." That is the essence of democracy and of faith in the democratic process. Dies investigations smack of the Stalin purges and the Hitler persecutions. They are far more un-American than the activities of those whom he "exposes." I trust that you and the members of your committee will have more respect for American democracy than would be implied by an appropriation to "red" baiters and Fascist baiters.

Its chairman's conclusions have usually been reached in advance of its evidence and have nearly always been more sweeping than its evidence justified. It has been genuinely guilty of 'red' baiting in the sense of overzeal-ousness to pin a Communist label on every species of liberal thought. It has made silly and vehement charges against several members of the Cabinet. In short, it has sometimes brought itself into deserved ridicule, and in doing so has endangered the very cause to which it supposes itself to be devoted."

DEAR SIR: I do not often write letters to committee chairmen telling them what I think. Even now I do so with some hesitation.

It has, however, struck me, after long consideration of the question, that the Dies committee did not reflect credit on the House of Representatives. It was quite appropriate to investigate un-American activities, but the methods pursued were not calculated to promote the prestige of the House. There is a strong feeling that Mr. Dies does not have the judicial temperament to conduct such an investigation, although I do not have the pleasure of knowing him personally.

such an investigation, although I do not have the pleasure of knowing him personally.

If the investigation is to be continued, therefore, might it not be preferable in the interests of everybody to elect a chairman who is judicially minded and who has as few preconceptions as possible? The committee led by Mr. Diss apparently arouses so much hostility as to weaken both its standing and its function. I do not know whether this opinion is justified by the facts, but I feel confident that it is widespread. fident that it is widespread. Very respectfully yours,

Dear Sir: The investigations of the Dies committee on un-American activities have brought down the indignation of all fairminded citizens. The committee has worked ineptly and illogically; it has failed to seek complete or authoritative evidence; it has accepted much invalid testimony, and has ignored sound refutations of certain of the matter presented. It has furthermore earned by its blatancy a most unsavory notoriety.

I sincerely urge you, as chairman of the Rules Committee, not to recommend continuance of this extravagant enterprise but to appropriate our money rather for the countless worthy claims upon Government funds. # [Press release]

A series of statements condemning the Dies committee as "no more than a publicity racket and a smear campaign, principally against many fine Americans who have progressive or liberal convictions" was issued today by the Council of United States Veterans, Inc., from its eastern district headquarters here at 20 West Forty-third Street.

The statements were made by veterans, among whom two were United States Army generals; one was a recipient of the Con-gressional Medal of Honor, former lieutenant commander of the United States Navy, former post commander of the American Legion and the Disabled American Veterans; another was a past department chaplain of the American Legion and a past State wel-fare committee chairman of the Legion; several others were former commanders of American Legion posts. Those who made the statements are all members of either the executive board or the advisory board of the Council of United States Veterans, Inc. This council recently adopted a resolution severely attacking the Dies committee and urging Congress to deny funds for continuation of the Dies committee activities.

In the course of that resolution the council declared that "the membership of the Council of United States Veterans, Inc., consisting of decorated and other prominent veterans of all walks of life, has observed that the membership (as distinct from the leadership) of the major American veterans' organizations, do not approve the tactics of the Dies committee investigation."

DEAR CONGRESSMAN SABATH: I note that your committee is now considering the question of extending the life of the Dies committee. While, of course, there is no objection to the work of such a committee if carried on judiciously and impartially, there is serious objection among fair-minded American oitizens to the extension of the life of this committee, if it is to continue to be headed by a chairman such as Mr. Marrin Dies.

I assure you that I speak in the name of many good American citizens in this community when I express the hope that your committee will see fit to deny an appropriation to the Dies committee, unless a fair and impartial chairman is selected for it.

Dear Mr. Sabath: The enclosed clipping from a recent issue of the Detroit News tells something of the standing of the Dies committee in Detroit. I would like to raise a citizen's voice against continuing any further investigations under Mr. Dies. The trail he left in Michigan inspires no confidence.

Sincerely yours

Sincerely yours,

ADELIA DODGE STARRETT.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BLACKNEY].

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am emphatically in favor of House Resolution 26 and the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities and Propaganda in the United States. This is in pursuance of House Resolution 282 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and the committee was authorized to investigate, first, the extent, character, and objects of un-American propaganda activities in the United States; second, the diffusion within the United States of subversive and un-American propaganda that is instigated from foreign countries or of a domestic origin and attacks the principle of the form of government as guaranteed by our Constitution: and, third, all other questions in relation thereto that would aid Congress in any necessary remedial legislation.

I am particularly interested in this subject because the district of which I have the honor to represent, namely, the Sixth Congressional District of Michigan, during the last 2 years has been subjected to subversive activities on the part of outside radicals who came to Michigan in great numbers at the time of the labor difficulties, particularly in the city of Flint and the city of Lansing, both of which are in my district.

Let me say, first, that the great mass of industrial workers in Flint and Lansing and throughout my district are lawabiding citizens, believers in the Constitution and believers in the fundamental principles of America. The major difficulty during the strikes occurring in Michigan, and particularly inmy district, was due to the propaganda spread by these outside radicals.

I never thought the time would come in my life when the laws of my city and of my State would be ruthlessly set aside, when disorder would prevail, when radicalism would be heard on every hand, and yet that time did come in the strikes of 2 years ago.

Loud-voiced radicals appealed to the masses to assert their authority, to disobey the law, to hold in contempt the courts of our State, and carried their activities so far that the local authorities, particularly in the city of Flint, were unable to cope with the situation and the State authorities did not interfere in this radicalism nor did anything to protect the law-abiding citizens, or to protect life and property.

The testimony of the witnesses from Flint who appeared before the Dies investigating committee, under oath, stated conclusively that the great trouble was the presence and the activities of outside Communists and radicals who were using the local situation as a means of spreading their un-American doctrine. Had it not been that the law-abiding citizens of Flint were in the great majority, believing in the enforcement of the law, believing in the integrity of the courts, then the radicals would have gained greater power than they otherwise did.

We hear a great deal on the floor of Congress in favor of freedom of speech. I know full well the constitutional provision which guarantees to each one freedom of speech. But I wish to call the attention of the House to this thought: That there is a vast difference between the freedom of speech guaranteed by the Constitution, and unbridled license of speech as used by the Communists and radicals who do not believe in American principles.

I think the time has come in America when, instead of shedding useless tears in favor of those who do not believe in American institutions, we should pay some attention to the great mass of honest citizens who do believe in the Constitution and who do believe in the orderly processes of government.

In my judgment, one of the great causes of the spread of subversive doctrines in America has been the loose administration of our immigration laws. I believe in immigration properly regulated, but I do not believe in letting down the bars of immigration so that radicals from foreign countries who believe in every other "ism" but Americanism should be allowed to come to this country and spread their nauseating doctrine of hate.

I have every respect for those from foreign lands who came to the United States with the intent of making this country their home, of becoming attached to American institutions and who learn to love the Constitution of the United States and who are willing to become American citizens and do become law-abiding American citizens. For these people I have the utmost respect, but for those who come from foreign soils, unwilling to become citizens of the United States, unwilling to take the constitutional oath as citizens, but who come here for the sole purpose of undermining the principles of our Government, for these people I have the utmost contempt.

I think the quicker we put teeth in the immigration laws the better for us. I think the quicker we deport aliens illegally here, the better for America. In other words, if aliens come from foreign soil, unwilling to adapt themselves to American principles and to become law-abiding citizens, let them be sent back to the land of their birth. America has no use for such people.

I can honestly state that the Dies investigating committee has done much to alleviate the radical situation in my home city, and the effect of this committee's activities, particularly in my home State, has been greatly beneficial and salutary. I am constantly receiving letters, letters by the hundreds, from patriotic citizens of my district, who stress the thought that the United States should free themselves from those radicals who do not believe in our form of government; that those who are here illegally should be deported; that the immigration laws should be greatly strengthened and then rigidly enforced. If we are to preserve the great heritage of American institutions and love of country, then this must be done, otherwise the great sacrifice made by loyal American soldiers who were willing to give their lives for the preservation of the Constitution and the American form of government was in vain. The great majority of Legionnaires, of Spanish War veterans, and of other soldier organizations are preponderantly in favor of the continued investigation by this committee.

I think this appropriation should be granted and the committee authorized to proceed fearlessly in their investigation, and let the chips fall where they may. There are no politics in this resolution. Every Republican, every Democrat, every man loyal to American institutions should stand back of this committee. I think the committee should be congratulated upon the splendid work that they have done.

I know full well the obstacles that have been placed in the committee's progress from certain sources, but again I state that if we are to preserve America, as you and I have been taught to believe in America, if the America of the future is to protect our boys and girls as we have been protected, then this committee should be authorized to proceed further.

I shall vote for this appropriation gladly, knowing full well that should it carry, as I believe it will, that it will strike a death knell to the ruthless and subversive group whose sole purpose is the destruction of America as you and I know it, and the substitution in its place of a government that will not conform to the great American ideal which has made America the leader of the world.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. Norron].

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is a well-known fact that no Member of this Congress is more opposed to communism, fascism, and nazi-ism than I am. Because this is true I am very anxious to support this resolution. I come from a district that is free of all isms. We are Americans and believe in true democracy, and we have worked hard to preserve that democracy. I want this committee to hold the respect of all people who believe in a democratic form of government. Therefore it should be strengthened by adding two or four new members to the committee. Surely nobody who is sincerely anxious to get the best results from this investigation can say that adding new blood to the committee will work a hardship on anyone. We know that during the hearings it became necessary for some of the best members of the committee to be absent. That condition prevails in every committee. A committee should be large enough, I feel, to take care of absentees. It should be so constituted that in matters of grave importance such as are before this committee it may at all times have not less than five members present to hear witnesses. Since there has been much criticism of the conduct of the committee, which may or may not be true, it is my conviction that in order to remove such criticism there should be new members on each side of the House added to the committee. We should then get behind the committee and do everything in our power to secure an unbiased investigation of the underlying propaganda spread throughout the country. We cannot do this, however, without investigating the evidence presented before such evidence is made public. I cannot believe any Member of the House would intentionally smear a witness or encourage a witness to smear another because of some personal or political grudge. Nevertheless it is a fact that this has been done, and many innocent people have been sacrificed on the altar of publicity.

One hundred thousand dollars is a large sum of money to be spent on an investigation unless the investigation is conducted according to the rules of evidence as they would be in any court of justice. If the investigation carries with it the confidence of the American people and gets at the roots of all un-American activities, placing the responsibility where it belongs, then $100,000 would be a cheap price to pay, but we are entitled to the best that can be had for the taxpayers' money. This committee has a great public service to perform. It can suppress un-American activities by getting at the facts; first examining the evidence and witnesses in executive session, and if found to be reliable and the evidence warrants, submit same to the Department of Justice for further investigation. If this course is not followed, or if any member of the committee uses his power to persecute for personal glorification or political advancement, we shall rue the day we voted this power and money to the committee. The Congress should be careful in the use of labels lest some of the labels be attached to innocent people.

Mr. Speaker, feeling as keenly as I do in this matter and intending to vote for the resolution, I sincerely hope the House will support me in voting down the previous question so that we may have an opportunity to amend the resolution by adding at least two additional members to the committee. This is one of the most serious problems in our national life. It should be disposed of in the American way—honestly, sincerely, and justly. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller].

UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, like most of my colleagues in the Democratic Party, I was too busy in the campaign of last November to pay much attention to the newspaper reports. However, I did hear some repercussions from the Dies committee even during that busy campaign—complaints that the committee was being conducted in such a way as to embarrass Democrats and to assist Republicans. At that time, in fact, it appeared many of the Republicans placed more reliance upon the Dies committee than they did on their own campaign committee.

I had expected possibly the normal change of 25 seats lost by the Democrats—which would have been normal in an off-year election. But when the election was over and 70 seats had been lost I naturally began to inquire the reason for it. Wanting to know the sentiment of my colleagues on this subject, I wrote to each one of the Democratic candidates, both those defeated and those elected, asking them to give me their views of the basic causes for so large a loss on the Democratic side. I was astounded to find the work of the Dies committee as one of the agencies which had contributed largely to this result. I naturally became interested and began investigating, on my own authority, which brought out the fact that most of the membership of the Dies committee itself, with only two exceptions, were also largely busy in their own campaigns for reelection.

I began a careful study of a series of the files of the press covering the entire Dies committee work. These reports pointed out very clearly the character, or lack of it, of the chief investigator for the committee. It developed that before very long the newspapermen themselves made a protest against the retention of Mr. Sullivan as chief investigator, and demanded that the committee in turn investigate its chief investigator. This protest among newspapermen became so strong that after many long weeks of use of Mr. Sullivan the chairman let him out only when the committee funds were exhausted. The character of the committee procedure indicates that Mr. Sullivan was selected and used as the fittest instrument to carry out the purposes of the chairman. I followed this out carefully, investigating thoroughly before I said a word about the entire matter.

I read carefully the report which Mr. Dies submitted to Congress. It is not an honest report. It is not based upon nor supported by the record of the hearings. I therefore went to the hearing records themselves and a careful study of the first volume showed perfectly clearly that there was little, if any, connection between the testimony of the witnesses before that committee and the report which the chairman filed. The reading of this testimony showed clearly that the hearings had been conducted almost entirely by the chairman of that committee, the Honorable MARTIN DIES; that it was a one-man investigation and carried on apparently with one principal objective—that of getting publicity for the chairman. Viewed in that light, it was a huge success. But, viewed in the light of the intention of the Congress in creating that committee, it is the most astounding failure imaginable.

It appeared from the press reports that the chairman of the committee had very early rushed to the radio and broadcast charges that can be classed as nothing less than totally unreliable, so far as facts are concerned. Claims and opinions, with nothing in the hearings to back them up, were rampant, intended to create fear and distrust in the minds of the people and discontent over anything which has been done in their behalf during the past few years. The intent of the Congress in passing the original resolution creating this committee is set out perfectly clearly in the resolution itself which I quote:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a special committee to be composed of seven Members for the purpose of conducting an investigation of (1) the extent, character, and objects of un-American propaganda activities in the United States, (2) the diffusion within the United States of subversive and un-American propaganda that is instigated from foreign countries or of a domestic origin and attacks the principle of the form of government as guaranteed by our Constitution, and (3) all other questions in relation thereto that would aid Congress in any necessary remedial legislation.

It was indeed to ferret out those subversive activities which in themselves might be informative to the House. Here it might be well to remark that the chairman of the committee in conducting his hearings almost entirely overlooked the intent of the House to receive information which was not already in hand. Instead of following that, the chairman very clearly in the hearings began devoting himself largely to those controversial matters which are entirely well known to the Members of the House, and to use his position as chairman of the committee to attack and injure those departments of Government with which his own ideas were not in sympathy. He attacked the National Labor Relations Commission through the most remarkable chain of unreasoning extant in the Congressional Record. The chief economist of the N. L. R. B., David Saposs, as a newspaper reporter some years ago reported a Communist meeting. The sapient chairman of the Dies committee grabbed that report as the opinion of the reporter and denounced him as a Communist. He concluded that because the Board had employed this former newspaper reporter as its economist that therefore the Board itself must be communistic. Of course, the whole Congress knows the history sequences which resulted in the writing of that law. The Congress knows the discussions which have gone on over its decisions. The decisions of the courts upholding the Board's rulings. There was no possible information which Mr. Dies could have imparted to the Congress except that in discussing the N. L. R. B. he stepped out of his prescribed duties in pursuit of his antagonism to labor. The National Labor Relations Act simply sets up an agency to protect the lawful rights of labor. Those only who hate labor attack the agencies which serve labor. Anyone who wants to know the labor record of Mr. Dies as a Member of Congress will find much worth-while information on that subject in the Appendix of the Congressional Record, page 485, in the extension of remarks of Hon. Joseph B. Shannon, Member of Congress from Missouri.

Broadly speaking, the chairman of the committee made attacks principally on organized labor. If that had been the object of the committee created by the Congress no one would have been surprised at the results, because Mr. Dies' labor record is more spotted than the leopard's skin. From that record there is no difficulty in arriving at the conclusions that his hatred of organized labor, and the rights of labor to organize, especially had from the beginning been his chief antiservice in the House of Representatives. It was not the intention of Congress to delegate to Mr. Dies the authority to attack labor nor the organizations or agencies set up to protect the rights of labor. His accomplishments along this line to the injury of labor, both organized and unorganized. must not therefore be accepted as the attitude of the House of Representatives on that subject. Indeed, the breadth of these attacks, always largely by implication, but sufficiently open to be well understood by anyone who will examine them, is that Mr. Dies attacked the entire New Deal, both in its ideals and its accomplishments. What might have been the source of encouragement along this line I cannot of course say. I think it would perhaps be disclosed if this House were furnished by Chairman Dres with a list of names of persons and organizations who offered him large amounts of money to continue his activi-

If his activities had been deliberately planned to defeat the purpose of the resolution they could not have been more successful.

As to the manner of conducting these hearings, I call your attention to a statement of the first witness before the committee, Mr. John C. Metcalfe. Mr. Metcalfe had been a newspaperman, investigating especially the Nazi German-American Bund in the United States. He had spent some months at this for a well-known Chicago newspaper. He was employed by this committee to continue this investigation. Altogether he spent about a year gathering facts for the use of the committee. The work was well done-done with intelligence and excellent observations. There could hardly have been a better investigator than Metcalfe. His information offered to the committee an opportunity to carry out within a very short time, and at small expense, a thorough-going investigation of the Nazi German-American Bund. He named the leaders; gave their addresses; gave sufficient information to locate exactly each one of the 32 uniformed companies of that organization.

With this information in the hands of the committee, it would have been a very simple matter for the committee to have called in all of the leaders and got from them a firsthand statement of their activities and whatever excuse, if any, they might have had for such an organization on American soil. It would have permitted the subpenaing of their books and records from which the committee might have learned the names of all the members of this Nazi German-American Bund; what arms they had; what drills they indulged in, where, under whose auspices, and by what authority. It would have enabled the committee to learn and report to the Congress where these uniforms came from: who paid for them; the source of the money; the amount of it, and through their books of accounts the several hundred Nazi conspirators in the United States could have been sufficiently tagged and the light of publicity thrown upon them. Where the law has been broken the heavy hand of justice would have been laid upon them with the proof positive of their participation in whatever crimes had been committed. That altogether would have been very informative to the House, and from all that proof whatever laws, not already on the statute books, required to prevent such activities could easily have been formulated and passed. If the committee had gone at this matter in that way, there would have been nothing but praise for it from any real American.

Chairman Dies failed, neglected, or refused to seize the books, accounts, the records, the uniforms, and other equipment of these shock troops of the bund. Whether this fatally indulgent attitude of the chairman had anything to with the attendance of Fritz Kuhn, fuehrer of the Nazi German-American Bund; the secretary of the bund, Mr. James Wheeler Hill; Mr. Gustaf Elmer, the national organizer of the bund; at a banquet in honor of Hon. MARTIN DIES at the Biltmore Hotel in New York on December 8 is a matter to which the chairman may well address himself.

Perfectly evident, the objective of the very intimate information which Mr. Metcalfe's statement gave, certainly should never have been given out publicly nor ever have appeared in the hearings. It gave immediately the opportunity to the bund to cover its tracks and prevent an effective investigation hereafter. The investigator is not for the purpose of testifying before a committee, but to furnish the committee with such information as will enable the committee itself to gather and profit by the information which the investigators are paid to secure. This is of primary importance, as anyone will see. Yet this same folly of public announcement of what the investigators have learned was given such wide publicity as permitted of the covering up of the activities of any of these subversive elements in the United States.

The information in the hands of Chairman Dies in relation to communism in the United States was quite as extensive as that in relation to the Nazi bund. It was not so well studied nor so well presented as was that by Mr. Metcalfe, but it was abundant for securing full information about the Communist activities in America—the source of the money for carrying it on; the actual objects of communism, and the organizers in the employ of the Communists in America, if Mr. Dies had really cared to know the facts and had wanted to communicate them to the Congress as that body had designed he should do when he was appointed chairman of this committee. But, as in the case of the Nazi bund, he broadcasted the news to the world which the investigators brought in and did nothing to secure specific evidence that could be of any use to the Congress.

The committee met and organized and arranged a proper procedure to be carried out in the absence of those members who were of necessity engaged in a political campaign. This provided that the hearings should all be in executive session until the testimony offered was carefully studied, and only that part of it which is applicable to the intention of the resolution should go into the record at all. Every other investigating committee of the House or Senate have always of necessity carried on their investigations through this method, for two perfectly evident reasons: First, to prevent injury to innocent persons whom irresponsible witnesses might through some ulterior motive be tempted to abuse. This is especially applicable to the present investigation because it involves the individual rights of American citizens. Secondly, secrecy was necessary to prevent guilty parties from being forewarned what the committee is really driving at. Both of these have been thrown to the four winds by the chairman of this committee. He proceeded through investigators of his committee to forewarn the very organizations and individuals which ought to have been brought to book, permitting them to cover up any of their erstwhile tracks. Also, it permitted base motives to smear many of the leading citizens of this country, without notice of any charge, without opportunity of answering. This statement is made broadly because while the hearings were being conducted the chairman many times said that anyone who wanted to be heard could be heard. But there were several hundred American citizens who had no possible way of knowing they had been smeared personally or through organizations with which they might have been working for the benefit of the country until the hearings came out. The claim, therefore, that people had an opportunity to be heard individually falls to the ground completely. I here refer anyone who may be interested in this subject to the remarks of the Honorable A. J. SABATH in the Appendix of the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD, page 405.

As soon as names and organizations of people began to appear through the volumes of the hearings hundreds of protests were sent to Members of Congress—men and women who did not know they had been smeared by being referred to as Communists or "reds," or some other un-American appellation, and therefore did not have an opportunity to face their accusers and defend their good name and reputation. After such miserable treatment as that, it is quite questionable whether any American who had once been smeared would be willing to submit himself to a hearing before a committee which had permitted him to be smeared clandestinely. Justice should not permit such miscarriages.

As a matter of convenience, after the proper method of procedure in executive session had been agreed upon by all the members of the committee, Hon. John J. Dempsey, a Member of Congress from New Mexico, an able, careful, conservative lawyer, was to look especially after the Southwest, including New Mexico, Arizona, and California. The chief inspector, Eddie Sullivan, was sent out ahead of him to California. After a short time Mr. DEMPSEY met Mr. Sullivan in Los Angeles, and after a very brief conversation was so thoroughly convinced himself that Sullivan had no possible place as an investigator that he dismissed him from his service and wired the chairman to pay absolutely no heed to any report Mr. Sullivan should make. Nevertheless, out of California came one of the most vicious pieces of supposed evidence that is contained in all of the hearings. I refer to the thoroughly infamous Shepherd Knowles, erstwhile secretary of the Associated Farmers, whose vice president, Phillip Bancroft, resigned to run for the United States Senate from California. It was in his special service that Knowles delivered his testimony of some hundreds of pages before the Dies committee. It is necessary to note that the Associated Farmers is not only not a farmers' organization at all but an organization of crooked big business acting under the guise of "Associated Farmers." It is the very antithesis of the New Deal and everything which the New Deal stands for. Later it was learned that the chief conspirator in behalf of this work, Colonel Sanborn, had written all this testimony for Knowles. When certain letters were discovered connecting Knowles up with some of the most infamous acts of espionage and persecution in the history of California, subpenas were issued for him by another Government agency, but he had already "taken to the woods." He was only contacted after he had gone into the desert, grown whiskers, and put on colored glasses to cover his identity and prevent service by another Government agency.

During a very hard political campaign in California this statement of Knowles was broadcast and used for political purposes against the Democrats and for the Republicans. One of the claims that Knowles set forth was that he represented the Legion of California. This was denied by the Legion officers but no note of this was made in the hearings of the Dies committee. It was and still is held out as being a bona fide statement of a disinterested witness, notwithstanding the fact that a few questions by the chairman would have brought out the desolating facts back of it all. That this propaganda changed many votes in California there is no doubt, because there is one thing that the American people very properly resent, and that is interference in their governmental affairs along every line.

Another piece of political activity on the part of the Dies committee was in relation to the election in the State of Minnesota. Mr. Gehen, one of the Republican campaign managers, came to Mr. Dies at Detroit and secured six subpenas. He returned to Minnesota, gathered up six stooges, one at least a mental defective, all ardent Republicans, and brought them to Washington and presented their remarkable testimony, which he had written himself for them on the train from Minnesota to Washington. One of these statements was so well done as a piece of political propaganda that it was published as a campaign document and was broadcast against Governor Benton in the campaign as the work of the Dies committee.

In Michigan the committee hearings were so timed and the testimony so composed as to constitute a vicious attack by every implication possible against one of the cleanest and most effective Governors in the United States, Governor Murphy. Again, if the thing had been thoroughly planned by an astute politician of Republican affiliation, it could not have been more effective against Goveror Murphy than the hearings before the Dies committee and the associated implications from these hearings.

That the same effect was exercised to a large degree in Indiana and Ohio there can be little doubt.

When I had become well convinced of the character of this supposed investigation I delivered an address over the radio making the charges that I am making here, citing the character of the chief investigator and a number of the thieves and perjurers whose testimony was taken and published in the hearings in the name of a committee of this House. The substance of this address is to be found on page 311 of the Appendix of the Congressional Record. It has not been denied and cannot be refuted. It constitutes a part of the most infamously conducted hearings in the history of our country.

Of course, I knew enough to know that I, too, would be smeared when I raised objection to continuance of Mr. Dies in control of another committee. True to type, and in accordance to method, immediately Mr. Dies pointed out that some conclusions which I had made in my radio address were similar to conclusions which some young Communist had The implication, of course, is perfectly plain; the fact that I had not seen, and had never heard of, the pamphlet, of course, cut no figure. But I am not going to be discouraged from telling the truth of a one-man investigation whose ignorance or worse motivated the hearings until the American people are awake to the fact that the first duty of a congressional committee is to protect innocent individuals against injustices. That the greatest abuse which can befall American institutions is to outrage the Bill of Rights, and to deny men the right of notice of accusation against them and the right to be faced by their accusers before they shall be subjected to the ignominy of having their names smeared in a Government publication.

I am herewith submitting three telegrams which passed between the Honorable ARTHUR HEALEY and the Honorable JOHN J. DEMPSEY, members of the committee, jointly to Mr. DIES; the answer of Mr. DIES to Mr. DEMPSEY and Mr. DEMPsey's reply to Mr. Dies:

LAS CRUCES, N. MEX., October 26, 1938.

Hon. MARTIN DIES,

Washington, D. C.:
We the undersigned have communicated with each other by tele-We the undersigned have committed with each other by telephone this afternoon. As members of the committee to investigate un-American activities, we request that you defer further meetings of the committee until we can be present after the election and until after the full committee has had an opportunity to meet and consider procedure for a preliminary examination of the testimony to be offered to the committee. We are greatly disturbed by the charges such as those made yesterday by the President himself that procedure has been adopted which has permitted the committee to be improperly used for election purposes, and we particularly deplore the kind of attack that has been permitted upon an outstanding Government servant like Governor Murphy, of Michigan. In a few States, like your State of Texas, there is only one election struggle—in the primary—and only part of the members are free to be in Washington, like you, during the fall campaign. But others of us, in fairness to our constituency and to all nominees of our party, must be in our district during this time. It is obviously unfair to us as members of the committee under these circumstances, particularly after it is under fire, that it should attempt to continue its hearings when we are unable to be present to participate in the determination of proper procedure and take responsibility for its proceedings. phone this afternoon. As members of the committee to investigate

ARTHUR D. HEALEY. JOHN J. DEMPSEY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 27, 1938.

Hon. JOHN J. DEMPSEY.

Lordsbury, N. Mex.:

Acknowledging receipt of your telegram protesting against continuance of hearings until after election, beg to advise that a majority of committee has authorized me to continue the hearings majority of committee has authorized me to continue the hearings regardless of the approaching election. I know that you are aware of the fact that the expenses and salaries of our investigators and clerks are rapidly exhausting our balance and that it is therefore necessary for us to hear the witnesses as rapidly as possible. But there is a stronger reason than this for the continuance of the hearings. Our committee is an agency of an independent branch of the Government, and any successful attempt to stifle the hearings for political purposes would be most unfortunate. Before I had any idea of what the testimony would develop I announced that hearings would be started and prosecuted as rapidly as nosthat hearings would be started and prosecuted as rapidly as pos-sible. The great majority of witnesses who have appeared before the committee were subpensed by our investigators, and all of our investigators were recommended by outstanding Democrats. and have always been a loyal Democrat, but there are questions much bigger than mere partisanship, and certainly I believe that the question of preserving the fundamental principles of Americanism transcends in importance political expediency. But even from a party standpoint I am convinced that it is better for Demofrom a party standpoint I am convinced that it is better for Democrats to take the initiative and fearlessly expose subversive activities that threaten the very existence of the Republic even if in doing so a few candidates for office on the Democratic ticket are involved. The committee has been eminently fair since the beginning of its hearings. In fact, I know of no other investigating committee which repeatedly offered the opportunity to any person or organization involved in any charge or attack to appear before the committee and disprove the charge or attack. To my way of thinking, it would be a cowardly thing to postpone hearings until after the election, for to do so would imply that the Democratic Party is unwilling for the people to have the facts when they go to the polls, which I do not think is true so far as the majority of Democrats are concerned; while I have the highest regard for you and would like very much to comply with your request, I you and would like very much to comply with your request, I cannot do so for the reasons above given.

MARTIN DIES, Member of Congress.

LORDSBURG, N. MEX., October 28, 1938.

Hon. Martin Dies, Chairman,
Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.
Retel 27th in answer to the joint telegram signed by the Honorable A. D. Healey and myself. When I was last present at an executive session of the committee in Washington the majority of the committee of the com the committee decided that, as a matter of procedure and in order to protect citizens who were being attacked by irresponsible people, making harsh and detrimental statements which could not be substantiated, the committee would conduct hearings in executive session, giving to the public and the press such information as was proved true and coming within the scope of our jurisdiction. You at that time called attention of certain members of the committee to the fact that partisan politics was being injected into the investigation, something that several members of the committee resented. Much valuable evidence has been obtained and great good could result if the committee will proceed along proper lines. You say it result if the committee will proceed along proper lines. You say it would be cowardly to postpone further hearings until the entire committee can be present and all the members can voice their feeling with reference to procedure. I know of nothing more cowardly than to permit wild and irrational statements which have no basis in fact and have only for their end the assassination of characters in fact and nave only for their end the assassination of characters of men who are outstanding and who both you and I know to be American citizens of the highest type. If this method is to be followed, it can only result in undoing what good the committee has accomplished and finally must result in total repudiation of these investigations. If we are to expect such a continuation I have no other alternative than to ask the Speaker of the House to accept my resignation as a member of the committee and to insist that my name he used no further in connection with the comthat my name be used no further in connection with the com-mittee's activities.

A careful reading of these telegrams will give proof to every essential fact upon which I am basing this statement, that Mr. Dies made it strictly a one-man committee. Read these telegrams carefully. They tell much of the story, are official, and are certainly unbiased. They are the joint accusations of two high-class lawyers, men of ability and experience. These telegrams were all given to the press at the time, but they need to be repeated here.

Of course, I am aware that the continuation of the Dies committee is going to be voted by this House by an overwhelming majority, one of the principal reasons for which is that the entire Republican side pledged themselves in advance to support the resolution to continue this committee. This is not to be wondered at, because the Republican Party did largely profit by the activities of this committee under the direction of Mr. Dies, and it is natural that such methods, if again employed, may continue to their advantage in the hereafter. Or this $100,000 which in their estimation may be a Republican campaign fund may burn their fingers.

Many Democrats honestly fearing that they themselves might be suspected of undue influence from subversive American activities will join with them. Many others will say, "What's the use; it is going over, anyway; so let it go." That is the source of the backing which this resolution will receive in the final vote on this subject.

Of the 435 Members of the House, not 20 had studied or even read the first 3 volumes of hearings. And nobody had read the fourth volume because it was not yet off the press. The Rules Committee was willing to, and did, report out a resolution for continuing the Dies committee under such conditions. I asked again and again, "Why hurry? Why the rush? Why not wait until the hearings are all printed and time given for the Members of the House to study those hearings and know what has been done before we were asked for a continuance of this committee?"

When I saw what was likely to be the decision, I put the question frankly to that committee of which Mr. Dies is a member, whether the protagonists of the resolution were afraid to let the House know the facts before voting. There was, of course, no answer to those questions. But the majority of the Rules Committee brought the question onto the floor of the House under a rule which prevented any Member of the House from offering an amendment to the resolution. I, along with others, should have voted for the resolution if it had provided for nine members instead of the same seven which the original resolution had provided. This would have clearly taken away from Mr. Dies the ability to dominate the committee and make it again a one-man investigation, with the spotlight again playing on the countenance of the chairman. But such an amendment was not permitted to be offered.

What we do not need in the United States is the suspicion, fear, resentment, distrust, dissention, jealousy, prejudice, and disorganization of American public opinion which the Dies procedure has stirred up.

What we do need most is the broadest possible tolerance along all lines. Tolerance of religion; tolerance of race; tolerance of national origin; tolerance of ideals; tolerance of opinions; and, most of all, at the present time we need an all-embracing tolerance of economic proposals. Because here we stand in the presence of six or seven millions of unwillingly idle men and women—idle through no fault of their own, idle because our great democracy has not solved the problem of unemployment. Only through the greatest consideration for one another—the broadest tolerance for the expression of ideas—can we hope to receive and consider the best ideas looking to the solution of this greatest of all problems—that of assuring through government an opportunity for a job for every man and woman who wants to work.

That is a task beyond the individual. It is the problem of the great democratic mass. It must be solved. It will be solved because our American spirit that has taken us out of every difficulty in the last 150 years must be trusted to take us out of the present difficulty.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, this House proposes in a few minutes to adopt by an overwhelming vote the resolution before it and to serve notice upon all Communists, Nazis, and Fascists that the Members of the House will not compromise in any way with the spread of communism, nazi-ism, or fascism in the United States. [Applause.]

I am hopeful that when this investigation is again under way it will get more cooperation from the executive departments of the Government than it has received in the past. I desire to quote some words of Alexander Pope in reference to the attitude of the administration, which has hampered and harrassed the Dies investigating committee from the very beginning, in spite of the fact it had a mandate from the House of Representatives that it should aid that investigation and supply investigators, lawyers, and clerical help. The attitude of the New Deal administration is best expressed in these words:

Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer, And without sneering teach the rest to sneer; Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike, Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FISH. I refuse to yield.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] and his committee need not be surprised at the virulent attacks and the attempts of the Communists and their friends of the United Front to smear the committee, as that is the usual tactics of the Communist Party and its allies and subsidiaries.

The Communists and other radicals are again up to their old tricks of trying to smear every investigation by Congress into un-American and seditious activities in the United States. Every known device of ridicule, distortion, and falsehood is being unloosed by skillful radical propagandists to undermine and destroy public confidence in the Dies committee. The congressional committee deserves the support of all American citizens, irrespective of party affiliations.

The deplorable fact is that not a single alien Communist has been deported to Soviet Russia since Miss Perkins took office, and I doubt if any will be as long as she holds office.

I hope the Dies committee will continue its investigation of the political link between the Workers' Alliance, a Communist controlled group, and the W. P. A., particularly in New York City. I hold in my hand a telegram from the Workers' Alliance that probably was sent to other Members of the House. It reads:

On behalf of Workers' Alliance of America representing four hundred thousand unemployed and W. P. A. workers, we urge Rules Committee do not extend life or vote funds to Dies committee.

And so forth. This telegram is signed by David Lasser, national president, and Herbert Benjamin, general secretary-treasurer, two of the most notorious Communists in the United States of America. These men claim to be speaking for 400,000 unemployed and W. P. A. workers. I say to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. Norton] that if we appropriate $100,000 for the Dies committee and that $100,000 is spent alone on exposing the Workers' Alliance and showing the wage earners of America that it is a 100-percent Communist-controlled organization, the money will be well spent. [Applause.]

We are talking about appropriating $2,000,000,000 for national defense. I say we have more to fear from our enemies within than from our enemies from without. [Applause.] Yet there are those who question the advisability of spending $100,000 to preserve our own American system—our free institutions and representative and constitutional form of government. [Applause.]

I love the Dies committee for the enemies it has made. I do not want this Congress to wait to take legislative action, however, until the Dies committee reports its findings a year from now. I hope the Congress will take action at this session and enact laws to deport all alien Communist, Nazi, and Fascist agitators and send them back to their native lands, and give their jobs to loyal American citizens now walking the streets looking for employment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to submit a unanimousconsent request?

Mr. SABATH. Yes, Mr. Speaker; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend for 1 hour the time for debate on this most important question.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'Connor].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, being a lawyer I, of course, cannot say anything in 1 minute, but I want to tell you this, that we have communism in this country and we have plenty of it, and we are going to have more of it if we do not find jobs and food and clothing for the needy people of this country. [Applause.] Let me say also that the House and the Senate did not help the situation any the other day by cutting down the amount Colonel Harrington and the President of the United States wanted in order to take care of the people until next June.

A few days ago I told the House my position against communism and all other isms, excepting Americanism. I need not restate my stand, but let us take stock of the immediate situation. With millions of men, women, and children living from one day to another by relief money and with our aged people receiving scarcely enough to keep body and soul together, we must not work ourselves into a frenzy if we find Communists and communism in our midst.

We must solve this economic question which challenges the best statesmanship of the country. Ex-President Hoover tried for 3 years to solve the question and President Roosevelt is continuing efforts to find the answer, but hungry and needy families are still with us in the number of millions. We must not permit this country to become a breeding ground or hotbed for communism. In desperation, when men and women are hungry, they will listen intently to any type of propaganda which, they are falsely told, will offer relief. Continued hunger and need cause people to go afield and sometimes to commit crimes.

Other committees have been appointed by this House in the past to investigate un-American activities with no results excepting they found out what we already knew. Let us quit looking across the ocean for trouble and turn our eyes closer to home and find a way to remove the causes of communism by giving men and women work at living wages. We attempted to meet the situation by pump priming; but remember the time will come when we will run out of priming water. I will not vote for an appropriation of money to investigate something already known, but if I could have secured my amendment anent the causes of communism, then we would have a horse of another color. With an enlightenment on the causes, Congress would have been in a better position to pass remedial legislation to meet the needs of our people which will wipe out communism. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, if $100,000 was being requested for the purpose of ascertaining the reasons for the unemployment situation, a great deal more good for humanity's sake would be accomplished than to spend that amount of money for the investigation of un-American activities.

If the advocates of communism, socialism, fascism, nazi-ism, or any other kind of "ism"—and God knows there is a multiplicity of them—tried to overthrow or undermine our Government, they would not be successful in their undertaking if we representatives of the people will secure jobs at a living wage for the millions who are unemployed.

Regardless of how much money we would spend for the investigation of un-American activities, we would not accomplish anything worth while as long as one-third of our people are in need of food, shelter, and clothing. Unnecessary human suffering. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Burdick].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I would gladly vote a million dollars, if necessary, to the Dies committee for a thoroughgoing investigation of un-Americanism in this country. Any such investigation would, of necessity, include a study of the wicked, disloyal, un-American ways of lobbyists attempting to influence the action of the Congress in the interest of the special privilege of powerful business groups.

As I see it, Mr. Speaker, lobbying is not necessarily harmful in itself. It is that lobbying that resorts to corrupt or subversive and unconstitutional means of influencing legislation to which I strenuously object.

In my opinion, the most powerful lobby of all, the most dangerous and subversive of all, is that maintained by the grain and cotton futures traders—gamblers on price changes in our commodity markets. I understand that the lobby-ists of the Chicago Board of Trade alone occupy an entire floor at the Mayflower Hotel. Other futures markets, such as the New York Cotton Exchange, maintain large numbers of lobbyists here at Washington. Their activities are most subversive of good government, and are pernicious in the extreme.

Mr. Speaker, let us get down to cases. There are many Members of the House who believe that there should be some provision of law on the subject of margin requirements in futures markets. There is, as we know, such provision of law as to stock markets, but not as to futures markets. Many of us think that the Commodity Exchange Act should be amended so as to authorize the Commodity Exchange Commission to regulate margin requirements in futures markets.

Yet there is a general feeling here, Mr. Speaker, that the speculators are not going to let the Congress pass any such amendment. If there is any basis in fact for that feeling which prevails among my colleagues, that is a terrible indictment against the lawmaking branch of the Government of the United States, and against those who have caused such a situation to exist. Lobbying of that sort is a treasonable obstruction of and interference with the fundamental functions of our Government.

There are many Members of this House, Mr. Speaker, who are convinced that the self-interest of these commodity gamblers is the one thing, above all, that has interefered with, and still intereferes with, the enactment of effective farm legislation. These commodity gamblers propose, by their dog-in-the-manger attitude, to force farmers into general insolvency by means of low prices, deliberately held by these gamblers "in line with world prices," and to force the entire Nation to suffer distress because of lack of adequate purchasing power on the farms in order that these market racketeers may fatten and flourish on the financial failure of the farmers.

Recently the New Orleans Cotton Exchange published its annual report. President Roosevelt was then at Warm Springs. He gave an interview to the press. In effect he said: "These exchanges deplore the sad plight of agriculture, but not one of them comes forward and offers any constructive program of farm legislation." I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the reason why these grain and cotton futures traders do not suggest any constructive farm legislation is that any such program would automatically abolish their racket. These market parasites thrive on low prices to farmers. They thrive on prices that are unstable and in continual state of fluctuation.

And the Chamber of Commerce of the United States aids this racket. The other day it held a conference of handpicked businessmen and farmers, and then it gave out a statement to the press that it favored direct governmental subsidies to farmers to make up the deficiency arising from low prices of farm products in the market place. The income of the farmers at present, on the basis of world prices, is not more than seven and a half billion dollars a year. It should be, on a reasonably honest basis, not less than $12,-000,000,000 a year. So the Chamber of Commerce of the United States would have the Government pay to the farmers each year the sum of four and a half billion dollars in cold cash out of the Treasury of the United States-unless they mean merely "token payments"-in order that prices may continue to be and to remain on the low, unstable basis of futures market ticker-tape quotations.

Certain of my colleagues have hesitated over the question whether or not they should introduce a bill to amend the Commodity Exchange Act to authorize the Commission to regulate margin requirements in futures markets. They seem to fear, because of the strong opposition of the lobbyists, that it would be useless to introduce such a bill. It may be that the futures gamblers will be able to kill House Resolution 25, which I introduced early in this session for a House committee investigation of futures trading.

There should be at least a hearing before a congressional committee on futures trading and its effect on agricultural prices. Light is needed on this subject to enable the Congress to enact effective farm legislation. But these board-of-trade lobbyists are now busy on Capitol Hill discouraging the holding of any such hearing. Arguments are being made privately why such a hearing should not be held, why there is no need for new legislation. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that those arguments should be presented at an open hearing, not in whispered confidences. It is an un-American, unconstitutional denial of the rights of our citizens to prevent, or to seek to prevent, the holding of proper congressional hearings. If the Dies committee will investigate the un-American activities of these board of trade lobbyists, I am sure it will render a very important service to the Government and to the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the investigation by the Dies committee included pernicious activities inimical to our Government, by both American citizens and aliens.

Insofar as subversive activities by aliens is concerned, I see no reason why we should not now protect ourselves from this possibility. Other nations have for years had in operation means for protecting themselves against alien subversive activity. We have long been too lenient in this matter. Certainly Congress need wait on no investigation before proceeding with the legislation required to guarantee this protection.

That the committee found communism promulgated by American citizens, both in high and low places, need surprise no one. This Congress should scarcely need a $100,000 investigation to apprise them of this fact. Certainly there is no need to leave Washington to observe the present trend toward totalitarian government. The expansion of bureaucracy in our Federal Government and the increasing regimentation of our citizens is well known to the Members of this body. Bureaucracy, fascism, nazi-ism, communism, are one and the same with slight variations. The Dies committee concludes the same.

Therefore, if we would stem the tide of communism in these United States, this Congress must attack it not only from without but also from within. An unbalanced Budget, a mounting Federal debt, financial uncertainty, and overtaxation lead to unemployment and consequent misery to the mass of the people. This is the fertile soil for communism.

This Congress must take back to itself the lawmaking powers which are now so largely in the control of the all-powerful bureaus here in Washington. We must bring about substantial deflation of this Federal bureaucracy. It is our further problem to balance the national Budget and straighten out our tangled finances and money muddle.

Whatever else may be necessary to save our Nation from complete communism, these things must be done—they are fundamental. Once they are done, the basic foundation for real recovery will be laid.

If bureaucratic or communistic control should be made complete in this country, it will not be altogether because of organized communistic efforts from the outside, but it will also be because Congress has failed in preserving the American system of free enterprise, vouchsafed us by the founding fathers.

The chief value of the work of the Dies committee has been to clarify the issue and to acquaint and arouse the public to the widespread activity of communism in this country. It is my hope that in appropriating this money that the committee will demonstrate to this Congress the need of early action by this body to check the forces within the Government itself which are undermining our American system.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Youngdahl].

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to urge passage of this resolution because un-American activity is a major issue, not only in my State but in the very district which I represent.

For the past several years un-American forces in this country have boasted that Minnesota was to be the proving ground for their alien philosophies and that other States would follow.

Having in mind the riots, the loss of lives, the destruction of property brought about by their efforts to establish this proving ground, I am convinced that the menace of un-American activity is the greatest danger to American democracy today.

At this very minute several hundred employees of an industrial plant in my State are idle because that plant has been illegally possessed by sit-downers for the last 4 weeks. Who here would deny that the sit-down strike is un-American?

The rank and file of most labor unions, not only in my State but all over the country could settle their grievances with employers in an hour. Members of those unions are honest, hard-working, home-owning Americans of the highest type.

In scores of cases the American laboring man has seen his union taken over and controlled by alien agitators and foreign trouble makers boring from within in an effort to cause riot and disregard for law and order.

A few days ago I listened to debate on this floor on the question of politics in W. P. A. The W. P. A. Writers' Project in Minneapolis is filled to the brim with alien propagandists, proud of their teaching that democracy must be overthrown, that dictatorship of the masses must prevail, and that God is a heretic.

Those are the kind of people that the Federal Government is paying to write the history of my State and my country.

Time will not permit my reading them, but I hold in my hand signed statements showing the names and affiliations of a score of nationally known Communist leaders who continue to spread their un-American teachings while working for the American Government in Minnesota.

I say to the Members of this House, unless we stop such un-American activity and do it soon I will not long have the freedom to stand here and make such a speech and you will not long have the right to even listen to such a speech.

No further away than last Sunday a Minneapolis newspaper, under an extra-column headline, "State F.-L. Ousts 13 City Delegates in Party Purge," had this to say. I quote:

The Farmer-Labor Party moved to clean house in the party last night, driving 14 alleged Communists from their convention and forbidding the Workers' Alliance and other groups from being part of the Farmer-Labor Association.

A wild 2-day convention came to an end in an atmosphere of bitterness that had Hennepin County the constant butt of attack by Farmer-Laborites from the rest of the State, and had Ramsey County uniting with the rest of the State in an insistent and successful demand for a purge and a new start in party affairs.

Some of my colleagues can testify that party purges are not always successful.

Minnesota for 2 years up to last November 8 had been under the administration of a Communist-infested third party. Last November 8 the people of Minnesota drove them from office because they wanted neither Communists nor Communist cat's-paw in power.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that to spend a billion and a half for defense against imaginary invaders who might some day come from Europe, and refuse to spend $100,000 to ferret out and drag into the daylight those enemies already here and tearing at the very heart of our democracy is sheer stupidity.

Defense against those enemies within our ranks is just as important as defense against enemies thousands of miles away.

Why look at the tree and miss the forest? Why spend a billion and a half building defense against imaginary invaders when we are already being invaded?

No great country has ever fallen because of attack from outside. Great nations fall from attack from within. That attack is already under way in this country.

If democracy is to fail, it will not be because some totalitarian regime from across the seas has landed an army on our shores. It will be when we have permitted these alien plotters to carry their campaign to its ultimate end.

If, as some of my colleagues claim, there is no cause for apprehension in this country, then why do they fear such an investigation? If we have no alien threat to this country, let us find it out. That would be a result to be welcomed, not feared.

If, on the other hand, a continuation of this investigation will bring to light the enemies of true democracy within our ranks, then let us keep chopping and let the chips fall where they may. The American people demand the facts. They demand that Congress control said investigation, in order that it may be free from political interference.

That, Mr. Speaker, is why I urge the passage of this resolution, and if this committee can expose these alien enemies, I will willingly vote for another hundred thousand, or a million, if necessary, to send them back to the dictators they love. America has no place for them. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I fully realize that Attorney General Frank Murphy does not belong to the Black Legion. I presume this is why the Dies committee did not investigate that un-American activity in my State.

The conscientious Members of this body and the people of the United States interested in the perpetuation of our democratic institutions are interested in legislation to curb un-American activities and are not interested in a long, drawn-out investigation creating Nation-wide unrest and demoralization. I believe I can speak for the average American citizen, and I believe that this investigation should report back to the Congress in this session so that we may enact legislation to actually curb un-American activities and not prepare some political philosophy for the 1940 political campaign. [Applause.]

No one realizes more than I the seriousness of the problems which face our American democracy today. The world is full-has been full for the past decade-of a number of ideologies that seek to supplant our democratic processes with systems which deny to the individual those liberties which traditionally are a part of American life. I know that there has been among a certain misguided section of our population an acceptance of these foreign philosophies. It is important that we should learn to what extent the efforts to propagandize our citizens has proceeded. Secret organizations with subversive aims should be brought to light. We in America who insist that the democratic way of life is not outmoded, who believe that democratic government can be made to function in a complex industrial civilization, must realize that we cannot remain inactive in the face of organized and overt efforts to overthrow that Government.

But I want also to remind you that we cannot afford, the Congress of the United States cannot afford, to authorize any investigation of un-American activities that does not confine itself to that subject. The Congress of the United States should authorize an investigation of the causes and extent of subversive activity in our Nation. We have not had such an investigation to date. We need an investigation that will ferret out facts, not rumor; one that will present to this body recommendations on which intelligent and reasoned legislation can be based.

Last fall the committee authorized by resolution of the last Congress came to the State of Michigan in the course of its investigation. On the basis of incomplete and inconclusive evidence, this committee permitted its findings to be used in one of the most brazen and un-American political campaigns which I have ever witnessed. I refer to the attempt to smear the character of Governor Murphy, now Attorney General of the United States. We now know the facts as to Governor Murphy's handling of the delicate labor situation which arose in the Michigan automobile industry. Every sane American applauds Governor Murphy for what he did-all perhaps except the committee which ostensibly was appointed to investigate un-American activities.

Let me remind you also that at the very time that the committee was in Michigan making political capital for the Republicans out of a prejudiced hearing of prejudiced witnesses, there was in Michigan a situation that well deserved attention. Almost 2 years ago I brought to the attention of this House certain facts concerning the Black Legion of Michigan. I said at that time—and it was a matter of public knowledge—that the Black Legion has as one of its aims the overthrow of democracy in the United States. Its methods were those of terrorism and brutality, even murder. Subsequent events have shown the true colors of the Black Legion. A half dozen members of that group have been brought to book and are now serving terms in State prisons of Michigan.

Who supported the Black Legion? What role did it play in the political life of Michigan? What connection did it have with the Wolverine Republican Club, of Detroit? How far has its activities been connected with the prevention of legitimate labor-union activity? What connection did the Black Legion have with corporate wealth? All these are questions as yet but partially answered.

Only a matter of a few weeks ago the reputed major general of the Black Legion, who had fled to Ohio-a Mr. Effingerwas returned on extradition proceedings to Michigan where he is to stand trial under the Syndicalist Act of my State. Perhaps the courts of the State of Michigan will be able to arrive at the true facts regarding the Black Legion. But last fall, when the House committee was in Michigan, was there any investigation of the Black Legion? There was not. There was no attempt to determine the extent to which the legion still survives or to study the sources of its support. No; the committee came to Michigan on a political snipehunting expedition; and, gentlemen, the people of this Nation are still holding the bag.

Mr. Speaker, I contend that the American people want action, not insults. Surely, with the radio, the press, and the movies, there is sufficient opportunity to provide the public with humor and entertainment. We do not need to create a special committee of this House to add to those facilities.

Gentlemen, with the indulgence of this House, I shall read a resolution adopted and approved by the Convention of the Upper Peninsula Association of Legion Posts of Michigan, of which I have been a member since the World War:

Be it resolved by the convention of the Upper Peninsula Associa-tion of Legion Posts, That we commend the Congress of the United States for its desire to investigate the extent of the activities of communism, fascism, and nazi-ism within the borders of the United States; be it further

Resolved, That we urge the appropriation of funds to conduct such an investigation; and be it further

Resolved, That the practice of the Dies committee in permitting the according and publicizing as facts matters which were only heresay and caused unjust reflections on good Americans is hereby condemned; and be it further

Resolved, That this convention commend all public officials of our Government, both of State and Federal, who have condemned subversive influences and who have recommended legal action to defend our form of government against such influences.

I note that House Resolution No. 26, introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies], provides that the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Propaganda and Activities is authorized to continue with the power and authority conferred upon it by the action of the last Congress, and further that this committee would be authorized to continue until January 3, 1941, before reporting the findings to this body or recommending legislation concerning the purpose of its creation.

My reference to the political activities of the committee in the last campaign in Michigan necessarily provokes this question: Was that political sabotage so successful in the mind of the gentleman from Texas that he wanted the power to continue through the 1940 Presidential campaign for the purpose of defeating the liberal movement so necessary to the existence of this democracy?

The conscientious Members of this body and the people of the United States of America interested in the perpetuation of our democratic institutions are interested in legislation to curb un-American activities and not in a long-drawn-out investigation that creates Nation-wide unrest and bewilderment. I believe I speak for the average American citizen when I say give us action and legislation, not dreamy investigations.

Therefore it is my opinion that this committee, if continued, should be increased by the presence of the Attorney General of the United States, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of War, and that the committee should report to this Congress not later than June 15 of this year with recommendations for legislation that would definitely curb un-American activities in this Nation.

If we are to believe all the things reported by the committee on January 3, 1939, and if the committee was interested in legislation instead of in its own personal aggrandizement, we should have at this time submitted to this Congress legislation based upon that report. The committee does not see fit to recommend legislation, but requests further authority to carry on for the glorification of the committee. May I present this question for your consideration: Is this Congress going to definitely act to curb un-American activities by legislation, or is it going to allow this investigation to carry on to such a point that any political philosophy that does not meet with the personal approval of the committee will be assassinated as un-American?

I am so thoroughly convinced that we are in present need of drastic legislation to curb un-American activities from the reports of committees already made to this Congress that unless this committee is limited in its report and recommendations for legislation are made before the adjournment of this Congress, I shall be forced to cast my vote against the resolution. If this resolution is properly framed so that we will be definitely assured of legislation based on the principle for which this committee was created, I shall be more than pleased to vote in favor of such a resolution.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] such time as he may desire.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, the purposes of this committee called the Dies committee are laudable and proper. My hatred of Communists is as great as my hatred of Fascists and Nazis. It is hoped that all influence making for converts to those "isms" can be ripped out root and branch. But some of the methods pursued by this committee heretofore make for increased rather than lessened communism, nazi-ism, and fascism.

I shall vote down the previous question so that we may have an opportunity to offer amendments to the resolution.

The personnel of the committee should be increased. Some of its personnel have been most intolerant and have been guilty of practices that have a tendency to create the very radicalism they seek to destroy. I would want the Speaker to appoint as additional members of that committee, men of poise and understanding, of judicial temperament, of fairness in thought and speech.

I shall vote for the final resolution primarily because recently, in a conversation I had with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies], he agreed specifically that he had made errors and that he would not repeat them. I asked him a series of questions in order to bring out his future plans for the conduct of his committee. His answers were satisfac-

Firstly, I asked him: "Are you going to make the same flery and unbalanced speeches over the radio that you have made heretofore?" His answer was "No." I explained that as chairman of the committee he was more like a judge; that it was improper for him to prejudice his witnesses by making intolerant speeches against them. He agreed.

Secondly, I asked him, "Are you going to hire a skillful and adroit lawyer to sift fact from fiction, wheat from chaff, and are you going to follow his advice and counsel? He said "Yes." Heretofore he and his committee members have re-frained from hiring counsel. They probably did not have money to do so. But many a worthy member of the bar would have been glad to donate his services. A committee of this important character cannot successfully function without the aid of good counsel. Again the gentleman from Texas agreed.

Thirdly, I asked him, "Will you continue to allow your committee to be a sounding board for crackpots and professional agitators?" He said he would not.

Lastly, I asked him, "In your reports, are you going to come to strained and violent conclusions based on flimsy and insufficient evidence?" He said he would exercise the greatest care and vigilance before making any pronouncements, and that he would be as cautious as possible.

It must be remembered that the leadership of the House has put its imprimatur of approval on this resolution. It apparently is going to carry overwhelmingly. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has been cautioned against intemperate remarks against the administration, and I understand further that he has agreed not to attack the administration.

In the light of these questions and answers and the pledges of Mr. Dies, I am constrained to vote for the resolution, after voting against taking the previous question.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, at the time this special committee submitted its report to the House, I issued a statement which I believe is an appropriate and constructive criticism of the procedure followed at times by the Dies committee. It follows:

I have signed the report because I believe that this committee, with the limited resources at its disposal, has shed some light on the scope and extent of the activities of subversive forces and have, in my opinion, definitely established that un-American forces are in my opinion, definitely established that un-American forces are most actively at work in our midst in an effort to destroy our form of government, and because it is my earnest desire that Congress shall appropriate an adequate sum of money to guarantee a thorough and complete investigation of the machinations and activities of these un-American forces within our borders.

However, I do not mean to be understood as approving the methods employed on some occasions by this committee during the investigation. The objectives of this investigation are of such paramount importance to the welfare of our Nation that every care should be exercised lest its findings be confused, undermined, or impeached because of procedure which may in some cases be or impeached because of procedure which may in some cases be charged as deviating from traditional American principles of fair-mess and impartiality.

While it is true that an investigating committee cannot be circumscribed by strict adherence to ordinary rules of evidence in accepting testimony, nevertheless, because of the temptation of some overzealous witnesses to take advantage of the committee by offering testimony either of an exaggerated nature or unsubstantiated and uncorroborated by evidence of feet. I believe that such offering testimony either of an exaggerated nature or unsubstantiated and uncorroborated by evidence of fact, I believe that such an investigation should be guided by orderly and judicial principles except where matters of compelling public interest require a departure. I believe that the groundwork should be laid for the reception of testimony by first determining its relevance and foundation in factual evidence.

Because the work of this committee is of such vital importance to the Nation, its investigation should not be permitted to be undermined and weakened in the public mind by permitting use undermined and weakened in the public mind by permitted to see of the investigation for the airing of mere personal grievances or unfounded charges. Neither should its patriotic services be permitted to suffer from any tinge of partisan or political considerations nor the forum of the investigation be used as a political sounding heart day persons seeking relitively educators.

tions nor the forum of the investigation be used as a political sounding board by persons seeking political advantage.

Believing that Americanism can best be promoted by adhering to the fullest extent possible to the spirit of our Constitution and its safeguards, I early made the request that, before the reception of the testimony of any witness, the committee first conduct executive hearings to determine the factual value of the testimony and distinguish between testimony which would shed light on the objectives of the committee and testimony in the nature of meaningless generalities, mere expressions of opinion without at least some foundation in fact and testimony animated merely by personal grievances. Moreover, where charges of a serious nature are made before the committee against individuals or organizations, traditional American fairness requires that every opportunity be extended to those charged to reply and defend their be extended to those charged to reply and defend their reputations.

If the Congress decides to continue the life of this committee or authorize any other committee to conduct this 'nquiry—and I feel most strongly that this work should be continued—I believe that sums adequate to supply the most competent type of counsel and condified investigators should be appropriated. and qualified investigators should be appropriated.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of this resolution to continue the inquiry by this committee. And if it is so adopted. I hope that the House will make it plain that it desires the committee to eliminate the unnecessary showmanship, sensationalism, and "appeal to the grandstand" that has done so much to impair the effectiveness of the committee's work and to buckle down to a serious and judicial factual investigation which may provide a sound basis for future action by Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mason].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller] has been unjustly accused of plagiarizing, stealing the words and thoughts of a well-known Communist writer and using those words and thoughts as his own in a radio address, and afterward recording them in the Congressional Record of Saturday, January 28. That is a very serious charge to make against a Member of Congress, a very serious charge indeed. For my part I question the validity of the charge. I give the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller] the benefit of the doubt. I consider him entirely innocent of the charge placed against him.

From what I know of the gentleman from Illinois, I do not believe he did plagiarize, that he did steal the words and thoughts that he used. I believe they were his own words and thoughts, that they expressed his own sentiments, that he believes what he said in that radio address, and that he should receive full credit for the same, full credit.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. No; I will not.

Now, there can be no denial that the words and thoughts expressed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller] in his radio address and afterward recorded in the Congres-SIONAL RECORD, are of the same pattern, are, in fact, nearly identical with the words and thoughts of the Communist writer, Mr. Adam Lapin. They are so nearly similar in pattern, in style, in content, to the words and thoughts of the Communist writer, that it was only natural that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller] should be suspected of plagiarizing. However, it is my well-considered thought that the similarity between the words and thoughts of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] and the words and thoughts of the Communist writer, Mr. Lapin, only proves that the minds, the thoughts, the ideas, the sympathies, and the aims of these two men are so much alike that they naturally use the same words and phrases to express themselves. That fact is the significant fact in the whole controversy, as I see it. It is the all-important fact, the fact that should be kept in mind in the future by the Members of this Congress and by the people back home. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the name of one member of this committee has become a household word. Lest the matter become too serious in debate, I suggest this committee be continued until—as I read recently—every Communist in the country is made familiar with that old maxim, "Never say DIES." [Laughter.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes. I favor the passage of this resolution to continue the Dies committee. The longer the hearings on the resolution continued before the Committee on Rules the more I was impressed with the work of the Dies committee. Every conceivable obstacle was placed in the way of the committee. It had to carry on single-handedly with limited funds. The executive departments of the Government refused to give it any assistance and in some instances the committee had to meet the studied criticism and active opposition of those occupying high positions in the executive branch of the Government. It was to be expected that every possible obstacle would be placed in the way of the committee by the elements it was created to investigate, but there was no reason to expect that the committee would meet with the opposition of officials of the Government as well.

Under all the circumstances it has done a very commendable job and should be continued in order to complete the work which it has started.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield a half minute to the gentleman from New York. [Mr. Marcantonio].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to register my protest against the undemocratic method of procedure by which this resolution is being railroaded through. It is most un-American and unjust.

After having worked for weeks and weeks in preparation of arguments against the continuance of this committee, I find that the opposition is now limited to 13 minutes, to be shared by 15 Members of the House. Just how anyone can adequately present his side of the case in one-half minute is beyond me. I am very much surprised to see that the Democratic leadership of the House has permitted this procedure. It will not be long before this same leadership will realize that in having allowed this railroading of this resolution through this House, it has created for itself a Frankenstein monster which it will find very embarrassing and destructive. There having been no other alternative left today, I shall avail myself of the privilege allowed to the Members of extending my remarks, and I hereby give my reasons against the continuance of this committee.

At the outset, I state that there is ample need for an investigation of subversive and un-American activities. I am not opposed to any such investigation. In fact, I think it should be carried on by a committee of fact-finding, fairminded, and impartial Members of this House. My opposition to the continuance of this present committee is that on its record this committee does not possess the qualifications which I have hereinabove outlined. Quite the contrary, this committee is disqualified from continuing any such investigation, and has disqualified itself during its hearings held last year.

Close and careful perusal of the record of the hearings held by the Dies committee will demonstrate to any fairminded person that instead of conducting a fair and impartial investigation into subversive and un-American activities, it permitted itself to be used by un-American and subversive groups as a sounding board to smear and besmirch the reputations of progressive leaders throughout the country, the labor movement, and progressive Democrats as well. Witness after witness appeared before this committee who was himself un-American and guilty of subversive activities. These witnesses raised a red smoke screen, and did one of the foulest political jobs in the history of this country. These native Nazi representatives used this committee to carry on their dirty Nazi work, that is, to attempt to discredit men and women throughout the country who are seriously engaged in upholding the democratic traditions of our country which those witnesses seek to destroy. Let us examine the record.

First. The chief investigator of this committee who was employed until September 20, 1938, by the committee was one Edward F. Sullivan, who was permitted to go around the country, in California and in Massachusetts in particular, where he released press statements, smearing honest Americans. He was never repudiated by the committee or by its chairman.

On August 25, 1938, labor's Non-Partisan League, in Washington, D. C., submitted to the Dies Committee an 18-page memorandum in which it pointed out among many other things that Sullivan sponsored a witness who had pleaded guilty and who had been sentenced to prison for stealing jewelry from a Washington woman. This witness's name was Alvin I. Halpern.

The press gave a great deal of publicity to this witness as a result of Mr. Sullivan's work with him. It certainly should have been very significant to the committee that the witness Halpern, on the day of his second appearance before the committee, was sentenced to a term of 1 to 2 years for the crime to which he had pleaded guilty. Not a word came from the Dies committee to the effect that it disavowed and rejected the testimony of this witness. It was also pointed out by Labor's Non-Partisan League in its memorandum that Mr. Edward Sullivan attempted to bribe Mr. Walter Gordon, a member of the National Maritime Union, and to have him testify falsely to the effect that the National Maritime Union was a Jewish-controlled Communist organization.

In the same memorandum it was pointed out that Mr. Sullivan had attempted to persuade the attorney for a union to engage in some double-dealing activities against his employer. The attorney, Mr. Angoff, rejected Mr. Sullivan's proffered information.

It was also pointed out in this memorandum that Sullivan had smeared one Leonard Green, organizer for the United Textile Workers, by stating that Green had forced his mother to live in destitution. The reporter who published this story, realizing that it was based on misinformation, revealed that the misinformation was given out by Edward F. Sullivan. The memorandum also pointed out that Sullivan, as revealed by the La Follette committee, had been employed by the Railroad Audit and Inspection Bureau, a notorious strike-breaking outfit, with a most notorious record.

The memorandum also pointed out that Mr. Sullivan had engaged in anti-Semitic activities, and in activities in which he sought to arouse feeling against both Catholics and Jews.

The committee was also informed that its chief investigator had associated himself with Mr. James True, and shared Mr. True's office in Washington, in the National Press Building, from which office Mr. Sullivan conducted a so-called "Consolidated News Service." Mr. True operated under many names, such as "American First, Inc.," and "James True and Associates." One of the so-called associates was none other than Mr. Sullivan. Mr. True is noted for his invention for which he obtained a patent of a police truncheon which he called "the kike killer." The memorandum also pointed out that Sullivan had addressed a meeting in Asheville, N. C., together with a Mr. Gerald Winrod, whose activity I shall describe later. In his address, as reported in the press, Mr. Sullivan detailed one of the filthiest racial hatred speeches ever recorded.

The memorandum also pointed out to the committee that Mr. Sullivan and his associates were engaged in the presidential campaign in 1936 in the vilest type of attack on the President of the United States. The attacks were based on religious and racial antagonisms. The same group issued the degenerate propaganda called "The White Knight," supposedly the journal of the Knights of the White Camellia.

Just what did the Dies committee do after it had received these facts? The memorandum was documented and accompanied with affidavits and exhibits. An impartial and fairminded committee seriously seeking facts would have openly repudiated this scoundrel. Instead, we find not a word of condemnation of Sullivan in the report of the committee. Not a word of condemnation of Sullivan in the hearings or in the press from Mr. Dies. In fact, in the exposure of the Asheville conference in the hearings of the committee, volume 3, pages 2385, 2386, Mr. Sullivan's name is omitted from among those present at that conference, even though Mr. Sullivan was one of the two main speakers, and figures prominently in the newspaper accounts of the conference. All that was announced in the press from Mr. Dies with regard to Sullivan was that Mr. Sullivan had been dropped, due to lack of funds. This, I submit, is tender treatment for one who had been permitted by the committee to go around the country destroying reputations in the name of the committee, and who, himself, had been guilty of un-American and subversive activities. This Sullivan incident in and of itself destroys and smashes to smithereens any pretense of fairness and impartiality.

However, the Sullivan incident is not an isolated one. An analysis of the record shows that witnesses with native Nazi connections, and hence un-American and subversive, were permitted to fill pages and pages of the hearings with their foul attacks on many, many outstanding fighters for democracy.

A study of the testimony of these witnesses and a study of the program of the organizations which these witnesses represented, will show that the hearings were used by them to carry out their program, which, in the main, was to discredit the New Deal, discredit the labor movement, discredit progressive causes, and discredit progressive Americans. Foremost among these witnesses from the standpoint of time and numbers of pages consumed was one Walter S. Steele. Who is Walter S. Steele? He is a self-alleged editor of the National Republic magazine. This magazine is definitely anti-New Deal and antilabor in character. In fact, its entire ideology is native Nazi. The magazine is distributed free and unsolicited to school teachers throughout the country, in an obvious attempt to influence their conduct in the classroom. The distribution is paid for by big industrialists at $1.50 for each so-called annual subscription (source, Senate lobby committee).

Steele claims before the Dies committee that he had never been connected with the Silver Shirts and that he had "absolutely no respect for the Silver Shirts or any such movement" (vol. 1, p. 309, committee hearings). As Steele made this statement under oath he lied and perjured himself. In a series of articles printed from July 30 to August 12, 1937, in the Cleveland Press, Steele is definitely linked with the Silver Shirts in Cleveland through his Cleveland representative and associate editor, Charles A. Kennedy. The reporter who exposed Steele's connection as well as the connection of his associate editor, Charles A. Kennedy, with the Silver Shirt movement, was one William Miller. On Thursday morning when I appeared before the Rules Committee in opposition to the continuance of the Dies committee, I read into the record a telegram which I had received from Mr. Miller that very morning.

I was not satisfied with the evidence from newspaper articles alone. I wanted confirmation from the source, and Mr. Miller, who was the source of these articles, in his telegram pinned Silver Shirt conspiracy on Mr. Steele definitely and conclusively. From the telegram I pointed out to the Committee on Rules that Susan Sterling, who is head of the master council of the Silver Shirts in Cleveland, whose real name is Elsie Theuer, was a very close associate of Charles A. Kennedy and of his coeditor, Walter Steele. Their association in one instance resulted in a conspiracy against the workers in Republic Steel. In fact, Arnold Gingrich, editor of Ken Magazine, definitely linked Miss Sterling with Silver Shirt negotiations with Tom Girdler, in his testimony before the Dies committee, volume 2, page 1226, of the hearings. The telegram which I read from Mr. Miller also established that he had informed, besides releasing this information in the press, Mr. Metcalfe, an investigator for the committee, of all this. He also informed Mr. Metcalfe that in substantiation of what he had printed, there existed a certain Miss Barbara Baker, who had acted as secretary to Susan Sterling. What did the committee do with all of this information that linked its arch witness with the Silver Shirts, an organization which another congressional committee had described as one that was "patterned after the storm troops of Germany"? (p. 11, report of the McCormick committee on un-American and subversive activities). Gingrich, in his testimony (p. 1228 of the hearings, vol. 2), gave the committee both Mr. Miller's name and Miss Baker's name. He also offered to the committee letters from both. The letters were not included in the record. Miss Baker was subpenaed. She wired Mr. Dies a request for fare to Washington. She received no reply.

From the telegram from which I read to the Rules Committee on Thursday, from Mr. Miller, I showed that on Armistice Day, when the gentleman from Texas went to Cleveland, Miss Baker went to see him to find out what she should do about the subpena. He stated that a subcommittee would be in Cleveland soon, and that a certain Mr. Howe would get in touch with her. No one ever got in touch with her. A subcommittee did go to Cleveland, and held secret hearings at the Hotel Hollenden. At no time did the subcommittee send for Miss Baker, or Mr. Miller, nor did it direct its investigation on the subject of Tom Girdler, Republic Steel, Susan Sterling, Walter Steele, Charles A Kennedy, and the Silver Shirt movement in Cleveland. The committee could very well have asked Mr. Steele to have presented his files wherein they would have found many letters from Susan Sterling in which she confided to him what she was doing in helping him in his machinations against real democratic Americans.

What did Chairman Dies himself do? Referring to both of those witnesses, he stated:

Both witnesses were subpensed. Mr. Miller denied knowing anything about it. He does not want to come because he says he does not know the facts (p. 2085, vol. 3, of the hearings).

In view of Miss Baker's statement and the statements of Mr. Miller, which I read from his telegram, before the Rules Committee, a most serious issue of fact and veracity is raised here. Surely, Congress should settle this issue before continuing the Dies committee.

If Miller's contentions and Miss Baker's contentions are correct, then I submit that the committee prevented an exposé of Steele's direct complicity with the Silver Shirts. Let us see just how the Silver Shirts were treated by the Dies committee. I charge that the committee avoided a real investigation of the Silver Shirts. First mention of the Silver Shirts was made at the very beginning of the hearings. This certainly establishes conclusively that the committee had ample time and money to make a thorough investigation of the Silver Shirts. The first day of the hearings, Investigator Metcalfe quoted extensively from a speech of Roy Zachary, field marshal of the Silver Shirts, a speech which is a direct incitement to violence against the Government of the United States and its officials. What did Chairman Dies do? He stated as follows:

We have a great deal of data here on the Silver Shirts, but we will pass it up for the time being and go into it at a later date (vol. 1, p. 47).

The later date never arrived. In fact, the Silver Shirts were mentioned only once in the committee's report, and then only in a passing reference to its type of uniform (committee's report, p. 112).

The Silver Shirts were mentioned several times during the hearings, but only briefly (vol. 2, pp. 1224–1232; vol. 3, pp. 2125, 2237–2245, 2357) without any significant amount of documentation. The manner in which the chairman of the committee turned off the testimony on the Silver Shirts is demonstrated on page 2357, volume 3. Metcalfe was testifying. The chairman asked him for information on the American White Guards, a pro-Nazi organization.

The witness Metcalfe answered with a description of Henry Allen, the director of the organization, and describes him as a liaison man between the Silver Shirts of California and the Gold Shirts in Mexico. Immediately the chairman interrupts him and states: "I think that is enough." Rather than an investigation of the Silver Shirts, I find, as a result of a thorough perusal of the hearings, that no effort whatsoever was made to investigate this notorious, un-American, subversive, anti-Catholic, and anti-Semitic organization. Its leader, William Dudley Pelley, only as recently as January 14 of this year, has boasted that he would not have been investigated. Not only does he boast about his never having been grilled, but he very significantly states that the Dies committee has done good work, in that as he claims the Dies committee has authenticated congressionally what he and the Silver Shirts have been belching for years.

I believe that I have conclusively established in the mind of any reasonable person Steele's connection with the Silver Shirts. I shall now also establish that he lied when he said that he was not connected with any other such movements. Steele is the spokesman, and has so represented himself, of the so-called "American Coalition." The president of the American Coalition is a John B. Trevor, a railroad millionaire heir and a professional immigrant baiter. He is head of the American section of the International Committee to Combat the World Menace of Communism, which is in reality a Nazi international, conducting, internationally, Nazi and anti-Semitic activities out of its Berlin headquarters.

One of the American Coalition's founders was George Sylvester Viereck, a well-known and acknowledged paid Nazi propagandist in the United States, as exposed by the Mc-Cormick investigating committee (p. 6, McCormick committee report). A clue to the sinister, subversive, and un-American character of the coalition is the presence among its affiliates of the American Vigilant Intelligence Federation, of which the infamous Harry A. Jung is president. The Mc-Cormick Committee on Un-American Activities reported as follows to the Seventy-fifth Congress: "Harry A. Jung and the American Vigilant Intelligence Federation had published and circulated great masses of literature tending to incite racial and religious intolerance" (p. 12). Jung has been a most prolific distributor of the scurrilous forgery, Protocols of the Elders of Zion. Other samples of his literature are Halt Gentiles and Salute the Jews, Americans Avoid the Dangers of Vicious Dictatorships, an anti-New Deal pamphlet, and, incidentally, reprinted from Mr. Steele's National Republic. Mr. Jung has also been responsible for the pamphlet entitled "The Man Behind the Men Behind the President," which is a slanderous attack on new Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter. Jung's magazine is a sewer of all the vicious propaganda distributed throughout the country against the President of the United States, the New Deal, and the Jewish people.

In the McCormick report we find that Hon. Henry T. Rainey, late and beloved Speaker of the House of Representatives, wrote to Jung as follows:

My files show that you are a sort of detective, worming your way into the homes of the most trusted members of labor organizations and obtaining information with which to combat the efforts of labor organizations to better their conditions, and that you obtain this information for the purpose of assisting "strikebreakers." The data I have shows that you foment strikes in districts where there are no unions and then settle the strike for a price. The information I have with reference to you is that you are the man who does the slimy, stool-pigeon work necessary for the purpose of destroying organized labor wherever it has contractual relations with employers.

Mr. Steele and Mr. Jung are pals.

Steele is also a member of the advisory council of the Paul Reveres, Inc., a pro-Nazi outfit, headed by Col. Edwin Marshall Hadley, who is the author of two anti-Semitic pamphlets issued under the name of Earnest Sincere. The pamphlets are Facing the Facts and Plan and Action.

Right here the committee, in these two pamphlets, could have found plenty of subversive and un-American material. Hadley also wrote under his real name the pamphlet Rape of the Republic, a widely distributed attack on the Roosevelt administration. Steele's magazine expressed its approval of the organization in an article which appeared in the June 1933 issue under the heading "Paul Revere Rides Again." The article, written by Colonel Hadley himself, says: "The National Republic has welcomed this dynamic society into the field of constructive education." All these writings are clearly un-American and subversive.

Steele is in good company. The Paul Reveres was founded by the high priestess of "red" baiters, Mrs. Elizabeth Dilling, and includes on its advisory board besides Steele, the rabid antisemite Col. E. N. Sanctuary, head of the pro-Nazi American Christian Defenders and coworker of Harry A. Jung in the writing, publishing, and distributing of antisemitic literature. Sanctuary is, in fact, Jung's eastern representative and an associate of the two most vicious antisemites in America, Robert Edward Edmondson and James True. Edmondson will be remembered as the man who was arrested under charges of criminal libel brought by Mayor LaGuardia and other leading citizens of New York. best known as the most prolific writer of antisemitic literature, according to a University of Chicago study by D. S. Strong, published last year, and in recognition of this fact has been invited several times to speak before the Nazi bund in New York City. Again, in the case of Edmondson, antisemitism and anti new dealism are brought together in the person of Howland Spencer, Edmondson's chief backer.

Spencer is the Hudson River aristocrat who sold his estate to Father Divine last summer rather than be a neighbor of President Roosevelt, and in his own name, as the publisher of the newspaper the Highland Post, is an anti-Semite and Nazi sympathizer of the first order. Another associate of Colonel Sanctuary is the notorious James True, publisher of the Nazi weekly news letter, Industrial Control Reports, who not only preaches violence against Jews, but tried to carry it into practice with the invention of a murderous club which he termed a "kike killer."

These are just a few examples of characters linked with the star witness, Steele, who lied when he said he had no connection with the Silver Shirts, and who lied when he said that he had no connection with any organization like them. Here we find him closely interlinked with the most dangerous, undemocratic, un-American, and subversive groups in the United States. He is the spokesman of these groups, and a coconspirator with the Silver Shirts. Yet Steele was the A No. 1 witness of the Dies committee. The record shows that he certainly took full advantage of the protection and opportunity afforded him by the Dies committee, to carry out the propaganda program of the Silver Shirts, of the American Vigilant Intelligence Federation, of Harry Jung, of Pelley, of Susan Sterling, and of every propaganda racketeer engaged in seeking to undermine and overthrow our fundamental democratic institutions. The fact that Steele was protected, the fact that Steele was permitted to use the committee as a sounding board, consuming 453 pages of the hearings, is sufficient to destroy any confidence that any American may ever have had in it.

I further submit that when last week the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] addressed the American coalition assembled here in Washington, in convention, and in view of the native Nazi character of the affiliated groups, he stripped himself of any vestige of impartiality, which is so necessary in the conduct of an investigation of un-American activities. When the chairman of the committee addresses a group and is the guest of a group which is violently engaged in striking at our Bill of Rights, freedom of religion, such as the affiliates of the American Coalition, is he then qualified to investigate them?

The committee evaded a real investigation of native Nazi, anti-Semitic, and anti-Catholic organizations. I have shown what happened with regard to the Silver Shirts. I have shown the treatment given to Sullivan. I have shown the star role and protection accorded to Steele. Let us now see what the committee did with regard to the Ku Klux Klan and Gerald B. Winrod.

The Ku Klux Klan is by no means dead. To the contrary, it is very, very active in many sections of the country where the American labor movement is seeking to organize workers, particularly in the South. A. F. of L. and C. I. O. organizers who have felt the terror of the Klan can testify as to its virulent existence. Only as recently as December, the Imperial Wizard of the Klan, Hiram Evans, announced that a national convention would be called to unite their forces against the American labor movement. What treatment did the Klan receive before the committee? The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] absolutely refused to go into the Klan. He stated "there is no necessity of going into that."

That has been gone into in days gone by (vol. 3, p. 2376), when witness Metcalfe attempted to offer evidence on this surely subversive and un-American Ku Klux Klan. If what has been gone into in days gone by was to be used as the criterion for exclusion from the scope of the investigation of organizations, then there would have been very, very little work left for the energetic gentleman from Texas.

Let us see how the gentleman from Texas handled Gerald B. Winrod. First, who is Gerald B. Winrod? Gerald B. Winrod is known to his associates as the "Jayhawk Nazi." In his radio programs in Kansas he shocked the entire Nation with his anti-Semitic and anti-Catholic rantings. He shocked the Republicans of Kansas who repudiated him in the Republican primaries when he sought the nomination to the United States Senate. His writings and radio addresses were so low that even the chairman of the Republican National Committee disowned him. His filthiest piece of propaganda was an attack on the Catholic Church in a pamphlet called "The Harlot Woman."

In his magazine, the Defender, of September 1936, he attacks the Roosevelt administration as alien and "red." He assailed the memory of Woodrow Wilson "as Jew-controlled," refers to Ambassador William C. Bullitt as "Jewish Ambassador." A long article on Germany in this issue of the Defender praises Hitler and attacks Catholics and Jews. It defends Hitler as "savior of Germany." And it seeks to justify anti-Catholicism by false charges of immorality and ascribes vile practices to the church and refers to the priests and nuns of the Roman Catholic Church as "filthy priests and nuns." From another one of his magazines, the Revealer, of October 15, 1936, we find a streamer front page headline "Roosevelt's Jewish Ancestry." It presents a chart which it claims "reveals the origin of the sinister spirit which today dominates the White House." To continue a further revelation of this man's writings and rantings against the President, against the Catholic Church, against the Jews, and against everything that is decent, would only fill up five daily RECORDS. But this alone indicates that Winrod was most certainly a fit subject for the investigation by this committee. But what happened? The witness, Metcalfe, on two separate and distinct occasions was shut off by the committee chairman when he sought to offer testimony on Winrod. Metcalfe offered a copy of Winrod's publication as evidence of his anti-Semitic and anti-Catholic activities. DIES announced that the—Chair received a letter from Dr. Winrod in which he denied that he had preached anti-Semitism, and denied that he is sympathetic with fascism. He says he is absolutely opposed to fascism and nazi-ism, and is opposed to racial and religious hatred, and denies that he has disseminated any literature preaching racial or religious hatred. Now, what I want to know is, Have you got anything of his in which he has done that?

Mr. Metcalfe replied that it could be found in the literature in the chairman's possession, and the chairman said "I cannot tell what all this is about" (vol. 3, p. 2373 of the hearings). Later the chairman said to Metcalfe, "As we do not want to do any injustice, of course, you have other evidence besides the question of his own statements?" (vol. 3, p. 2375 of the hearings).

Later during the same testimony Metcalfe reported on a Nation-wide anti-Semitic and pro-Nazi conference held in Kansas City, and attended by representatives of the Silver Shirts, the American Vigilant Intelligence Federation, the German-American Bund, and many others, including Winrod (vol. 3, p. 2387 of the hearings). Metcalfe had been basing his report on his "own information and substantiated by the Department of Justice" (vol. 3, p. 2385 of the hearings) He quoted from a speech by one of the Nazi leaders and said it was substantiated by the Department of Justice (vol. 3, p. 2387 of the hearings). Then he attempted to quote from a speech by Winrod as it was reported by the Department of Justice report. Mr. Dies interrupted him, saying that the Department of Justice had asked that no quotations from the report be given. Mr. Metcalfe then asked: "Do you want the general trend of this?"—indicating paper. Mr. Dies answered: "We will hold this in abeyance. We will respect the wishes of the Department of Justice in this matter" (vol. 3, p. 2387 of the hearings).

It is quite obvious that the chairman of the committee did not overexert himself in investigating Mr. Winrod. Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues, in the light of what I have hereinabove revealed, and in the light that the committee's report devotes only a page and a half to native Nazi groups (p. 1718 of the report) it is obvious that the committee not only failed to make a real investigation of these native Nazis, anti-Catholic, anti-Semitic, subversive, and other un-American organizations, but that in some instances its investigator was not given a full and free expression of the result of his investigations of these organizations. I say, yes; by all means let us investigate organizations that conspire to overthrow our democratic form of government, that conspire against our democratic rights, that incite to overthrow the basic doctrine of freedom of religion. There is a real need for such an investigation, and I want it, and I am sure you do. However, let us not become confused. We cannot do this job through the continuance of this committee. This is clearly established on the record of its past performance. I challenge contradiction.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the very outset that I am most anxious that the task assigned to the Un-American Activities Committee be completed in the most thorough fashion and at the earliest possible date. Accordingly I will support any proposal to clothe a representative committee of this House with authority to act vigorously in the pursuit of the original purpose, granting such committee whatever amount of money is necessary to ferret out subversive movements which threaten our democracy. I feel, however, that the so-called Dies committee has made some very serious errors which gave the country the impression that Frank Murphy is a Communist, that our Detroit schools are shot through with communism, and that our school teachers are injecting the virus of un-Americanism into the tender beings of our school children. Of course, nothing could be further from the truth, and nothing in the world could be more helpful to communism than to link with it the respected names of some of our best citizens, holding office or in private life. Churchmen of various denominations were placed in this same category by publicity seekers and by men of doubtful character without the opportunity of defending themselves.

The committee is not altogether to blame for this erroneous propaganda broadcast throughout the Nation, but it is to blame for the lack of proper safeguards for its willingness to summon and pay the expenses of people who may have had ulterior motives. The committee is charged with a great responsibility and should therefore issue, after hearing properly qualified witnesses, statements to the press. Other great committees of the House, notably the McCormack committee, performed splendid service without destroying the reputations of innocent and good citizens. The people have a right to expect the protection of their good names and, more than that, a right of defending themselves. It is the looseness of performance that I criticize. It is the method which caused a miscarriage of the intent of the House of Representatives and destroyed reputations which were spotless in their loyalty and patriotism that I protest against. The few brief moments I have to discuss this important matter will not permit me to go into detail. I criticize the House for its parsimony, for penny pinching, for the niggardly appropriation of $25,000 for an investigation of a billion-dollar propaganda system rooted in alienism and foreign soil. I am willing and anxious to appropriate any amount necessary to do a good job in any investigation that will uncover and drive out any and all "isms" and subversive movements.

I contend that right or wrong the confidence of many of our people, insofar as the Dies committee is concerned, has been destroyed. The committee has lost face, lost effectiveness for the future, and all that I propose is that the House vote down the previous question in order that the resolution might be amended to permit the Speaker to name a new committee to carry on with utmost vigor and perseverance.

All that I want to do is to substitute the adjective "the" for the vowel "a" in line 1 of the resolution. Certainly our great Speaker can be trusted to rename members of the committee and add other reputable and aggressive members, equal in ability and character with those previously named, who can continue the work, profiting by the mistakes heretofore made. I have the highest regard for my friend from Texas, and he knows I am sincere in saying so. We have worked together before, and he will concede that I am as eager as he is to extirpate un-American activities from our national life. I believe he should, in the interest of restoring public confidence, join with others in this House toward the creation of a new and greater committee.

Dynamic and personable, the chairman of the committee made a great mistake when he rushed his investigation to such an extent as to deprive the committee of the services of two of its most valuable and distinguished members. I refer to my colleagues, Mr. Dempsey, from New Mexico, and Mr. Healey, from Massachusetts. Nothing was gained by the haste and much was lost in their being deprived of an opportunity to serve as the House intended.

I hope the committee will itself acquiesce and accept the amendment. It is vital to the Nation in that it will permit immediate and accelerated action without any handicap or suspicion.

We need more than anything else at this time, Mr. Speaker, legislation with teeth in it to curb these subversive activities and to destroy them.

We know of their existence, and rather than investigate let us as rapidly as possible legislate. Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. Voorhis].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, my own views on this subject can be found in the Appendix of the Record on page 385. I will not have time to give them here.

I have no time to speak, except to say that the type of appeal that has been made on the Republican side of the House for the passage of this resolution is illustrative of the thing that I fear, namely, a concerted attempt to identify every clean, decent American progressive movement in defense of the rights of the common people of this country with communism. If that spirit continues, I say our country is in danger. [Applause.] My reason for saying that is that I believe we have got to have room for honest divergences of opinion on the problems we face without trying to link our opponents with some un-American movement. Unless we keep alive the spirit of tolerance and fair play we are in danger of losing our liberties. Turn loose a vindictive spirit of hate and prejudice and it will be hard to control.

The work of the Dies committee, insofar as it has consisted of revealing facts about communism, nazi-ism, and fascism in this country, is a work in which everyone believes and all favor. Were this committee not continued I should certainly favor the setting up of another committee to carry on that work.

The reason I shall vote against continuing the Dies committee is simply that I cannot put my stamp of approval on what has happened to the reputations of a great many sincere, patriotic people in this country. To call in question a man's patriotism and devotion to the welfare of his country is a most serious thing. Any committee dealing with matters of that kind ought to be as judicious in its conduct, as careful not to allow publicity to be given to unsubstantiated charges as it can possibly be. If it is, then the force of what it has to say will be the greater. But if it is not, then people may be condemned before they have fair opportunity for defense, and the mere accusation, however false, before a congressional committee may carry in an inflamed public mind an appearance of validity which the same accusation made elsewhere could not have.

My vote against continuation of this committee is a vote of protest against its methods. I imagine the resolution will be adopted. If it is, I can only hope that the investigation will be effective in bringing to light facts regarding movements seeking to overthrow our constitutional democracy and substitute any sort of dictatorship for it; and I can only also hope that the mistakes of the past will be avoided.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Martin].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, if there was ever any doubt whether the un-American investigation by the Dies committee has been resolved into an attack on the President of the United States and his administration, it would have been removed by the language of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] and other Members on the Republican side of the House. As far as I am concerned, with 160 Republicans to smear Roosevelt and the New Deal—and that is all they have done so far in this session—I do not see the necessity of wasting the taxpayers' money to furnish a Democratic committee to supply the dirt. I do not blame the Republicans. It is talked around the Chamber that the activities of this committee so far has emptied a number of Democratic seats in this Chamber, and they no doubt hope they will empty a lot more in 1940. [Applause.]

The attack is necessarily on the President, and the tail goes along with the hide. If a Communist sympathizer is now at the head of the Department of Justice, the President appointed him. If the Department of Labor is sympathetic to communism, the President is responsible. If the W. P. A. is honeycombed with communism, the President is responsible. If, as charged by the chairman of the committee, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Labor, the Attorney General, and other governmental agencies here in Washington have sought to thwart and discredit the committee, they all are the President's appointees—he must be cognizant of their actions and he must be in sympathy with them. It is the President who is being hit over the shoulders of these subordinates.

Every speech on this subject made on the Republican side of the aisle is filled with insinuations and sneers against the President, and every thrust at him is loudly applauded on that side of the aisle. They go as far as they dare to say that he is openly countenancing an alliance between the Democratic Party and communism in this country. They want to destroy him and his works. No Democrat can shut his eyes to this, or gainsay it, although many of them talk one way in the cloak room and vote the other way on the floor. They will do it on this resolution.

The course which the Democratic Party began in the last Congress, and which it is continuing in this Congress, is alienating the progressive and labor forces to which it owes its place and power.

There is nothing for us on the other side of the fence. We would not be trusted by the interests which have been so long and so well served by the Republican Party. What I fear is that the course of this committee is having the effect of identifying in the public mind new dealism, liberalism, and labor, with radicalism and communism, and that it will serve to still further demoralize and divide the Democratic membership in Congress and discredit the administration nationally.

It may go beyond this. I have no doubt that every charge of communism against the administration registers in Berlin and Rome, where democracy and communism are already identified. Already the dictators identify the democracies of Europe in the category of Russia, and we are furnishing the same ammunition to be shot at us.

This committee had assigned to it a most important work, and it ought to be reconstituted so that that work could be carried out as intended. Even its friends on the floor admit that it has gone afield, and the fact is that it has gone further afield than they admit. If it keeps on, it will dig more graves for Democrats than for Communists.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Coffee].

The SPEAKER. There is one-half minute remaining. The gentleman from Washington is recognized.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I rise to register my decisive objection to the continuation of the Dies committee.

I base my opposition to the renewal of the life of this investigating body upon its manner of procedure as revealed in the printed copy of its hearings. I likewise voice my protest against the omission by the committee to make a thorough and painstaking investigation of Fascist and Nazi organizations in the United States. We have Silver Shirts, German-American bunds, Ku Klux Klan, Christian Party, anti-Semitic organizations flourishing in this broad land, but the committee paid scant attention to their nefarious activities.

The heads of these organizations are known, their addresses readily available, their books and accounts subject to subpena. Why was this not done?

Mr. Speaker, the effect of this committee has been to inculcate in the minds of the gullible an impression that many of the most reputable citizens in our land are Communists, or dupes of communism. One witness testified that Shirley Temple had lent herself to communism. One witness charged the Lt. Gov. Ellis Patterson, of California, was a Communist. The same witness stated that Labor's Non-Partisan League was under the Communist control in California (hearings, p. 2033). On page 2034 of the hearings we find these ex parte charges:

The State of California has * * * as candidates * * * the following: Culbert Olson for Governor, who fraternizes with and accepts the program of the Communist Party. Ellis Patterson for Lieutenant Governor, a member of the Communist Party. Sheridan Downey, for United States Senator, was a running mate of Communist (sic) Upton Sinclair in 1934. * * * To further establish evidence of the candidates listed above * * *---

I categorically charge that the foregoing statements are falsehoods. Among reasons given by Witness Knowles for the conclusion that these men are Communists is that a Communist newspaper spoke in friendly terms about some of them; that one of them was a visitor at a Non-Partisan League meeting; that greetings relative to world peace emanating from one of the men charged were read at a meeting of the American League Against War and Fascism; that the Commonwealth Federation had spoken in kindly fashion of one of them; that the three men had urged that Tom Mooney be pardoned. Ye gods and little fishes! To what a low degree have we sunk when reputable citizens are thus indicted before a congressional agency in their absence by innuendo, gossip, guesses, hearsay, and wishful thinking.

The American Civil Liberties Union is subjected to vitriolic attack before this same committee—hearings, page 2039 and the following. The statement is blandly made that the majority of the board of directors of this organization "are so well known nationally for their Communist activities that any comment thereon would be superfluous." The author of this remarkable statement may insist that comment would be superfluous, but I make so bold as to comment. The general counsel of this organization is one of America's most eminent lawyers, Mr. Arthur Garfield Hays. In a radio broadcast recently Mr. Hays stated:

I realize we should not too harshly condemn men like the honorable Congressman from Texas [Mr. Dres]. Lack of understanding of what Americanism means is largely responsible for their acts. * * They know little of philosophy or history; they fail to appreciate what democracy means. It cannot be expected that these men would understand the Bill of Rights, for to them the only permissible views are those which they approve. * * * These men start with a will to believe—a will to believe those witnesses who, because of ignorance, prejudice, malice, personal aggrandizement, desire for publicity * * * come before a committee and are permitted to express opinions which, since they are the opinions of the committee, are accepted by the committee as facts.

The American Civil Liberties Union was repeatedly attacked by witnesses appearing before the committee. In the report of the committee we find these words:

From the evidence before us we are not in a position to definitely state whether or not the American Civil Liberties Union can properly be classed as a Communist organization.

The inference is plain. The impression sought to be created in the credulous mind is obvious, but the purpose of evidence is to enable one to report what he can state, not what he cannot state. This organization repeatedly requested that the Dies committee permit its officers to be heard, but the requests went unanswered. When the committee had concluded its hearings, the privilege was vouchsafed the union. as to other accused organizations, of submitting an affidavit to which nobody paid any attention and to which no reference is made in the committee's report. In investigating the union, however, the committee invited none of its officers to testify. Among members of long standing, or of the national committee of the American Civil Liberties Union, will be found some of the leading intellectuals and most brilliant thinkers in the United States, citizens of all political persuasions, whose patriotism it is outrageous to question. Among these will be found William Allen White, publisher of the Emporia (Kans.) Gazette, America's foremost newspaper editor; William E. Dodd, Sr., great educator and writer, former Ambassador to Germany; Bishop Edgar Blake, of the Methodist Church; Felix Frankfurter, now Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States; Prof. John Dewey, America's greatest living philosopher; Dr. Lloyd Garrison, dean of the Harvard Law School; Col. William J. Donovan, eminent lawyer, one of our most prominent Republicans; Dr. Mary E. Woolley, perhaps the leading feminine teacher in America. It might be added parenthetically that when Felix Frankfurter was nominated by the President as Justice of the United States Supreme Court an attempt was made in the Judiciary Committee of another body to question his fitness for the high judicial post because of his activities in connection with the American Civil Liberties Union. So shatteringly did Mr. Frankfurter refute the aspersions that the committee unanimously reported his nomination favorably; and in another body of this Congress not a single vote was registered against his confirmation, though he had been active for years as a member of the American Civil Liberties Union.

This organization believes in free speech and assemblage, even for unpopular views. It has defended the rights of Negroes in the South, the Ku Klux Klan in Boston, radicals in California, evolutionists in Tennessee. It has fought for Tom Mooney, for the Scottsboro Negroes. It has defended Henry Ford against an order of the Labor Board which denied him the right to spread antiunion propaganda. It has befriended unpopular religious groups. Recently, United States District Judge Clark handed down a decision in which will be found these significant words:

Plaintiff, American Civil Liberties Union, was established and is maintained for the purpose of taking such measures as it deems lawful and essential for the enforcement of the rights secured by the first amendment and the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States. * * * The purposes of the plaintiffs above set forth are in the letter and spirit of our Constitution and laws and of the theory of our democratic institutions. * * * There is no competent proof that the plaintiffs or any of them had any other purpose. * * *

Despite the desirability of exposure of un-American activities, it seems perfectly obvious from the record that any committee under Congressman Dies is wholly incapable of giving the American public a fair inquiry or honest conclusions. Any such investigation will be weighted on the side of reaction and against the progressive program overwhelmingly supported by the American public. One cannot resist the suspicion that the demand for 2 years more of these sensation-seeking antics rests upon a desire to affect the 1940 national election. Is Congress to put into the hands of a committee with this ecord the weapons to do on a national scale what it accomplished in part on a local scale in the last elections? Or does the public want what I believe it does, an honest exposure of foreign propaganda aimed at our American form of government?

If that is the case, the job can be done either by the Department of Justice, fully equipped to investigate and ferret out the violators of law and to recommend needed laws, or by a joint committee of House and Senate, which would rise above the suspicion of reactionary partisan ends.

Nor are 2 years needed to expose the enemies of democracy and to recommend legislation against them. Congress can now adopt legislation to end any preparations for violence against our democratic institutions by passing a bill already introduced to prohibit private military training or the use of arms by private organizations. American law is otherwise wholly adequate to protect our liberties. The conspiracy statutes, the law requiring the registration of agencies engaged in foreign propaganda, the immigration and deportation acts, these and others protect our democracy in law.

Recently a committee of 150 lawyers of national repute made an investigation of the activities of the Dies committee and drew up a report thereon consisting of 40 pages. A casual reading of this report will reveal in countless instances the bias of the Dies committee and the undignified manner of its procedure. I commend its reading to all of you.

In the debates preceding the adoption of the original Dies committee resolution (Congressional Record, 3d sess., 75th Cong., May 26, 1938, p. 9961) the gentleman from Texas, in the course of his remarks designed to reveal the need for such a committee, said:

I am not inclined to look under every bed for a Communist, but I can say to this House that there is in my possession a mass of information showing the establishment and operation of some 30 Nazi camps in the United States. * * *

Arguing in favor of the adoption of the resolution, Mr. Dies stated he was conscious of the possible abuse of the immense power granted to a congressional committee and assured his colleagues that his committee would not be guilty of such abuse:

I can conceive that a committee constituted or composed of men whose objectives are to gain publicity or whose object it is to arouse hatred against some race or creed, or to do things of that sort, might do more harm than good.

In the public press, Mr. Dies was quoted on June 19, 1938:
This is not going to be any "shooting in the dark" inquiry. We want the facts only. * * *

I submit that anyone who takes the time to read the hearings of the Dies committee must unavoidably come to the conclusion that the committee has been culpable of actions and conduct that are most reprehensible. I exculpate from responsibility in this connection, however, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. Dempsey] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Healey]. Approximately 90 percent of the hearings reveal the chairman's cross-questioning and exclusive handling of the hearing.

The question is, Has the committee sought and obtained facts rather than opinions and conclusions? Has it ever defined the amazing word "un-American"? Has it not, rather, pictured any citizen of liberal or progressive leanings as being tinctured by the virus of communism? Could any lawyer of experience enthuse over the admission of inadmissible evidence? Are we justified by the past conduct of the committee in continuing its operation?

Is a Congress which reduced the appropriation to provide work for the unemployed in the amount of $150,000,000 in a position logically to authorize the expenditure of a large sum of money to ascertain whether discontent exists in the United States?

The gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] has properly asked why it would not be sensible to investigate the causes of subversive activity. The wonder to me is that we do not have more Fascists or Communists, when we recall how many millions of our citizens are ill-housed and undernourished and lack a job. The committee is seeking to find out facts which are already well known. In recent years two similar committees have functioned, albeit in a different manner. These were known as the McCormack and Fish committees. The former committee made numerous recommendations of what it deemed to be needed legislation. Congress ignored all these recommendations. Facts concerning subversive activities are readily available if vigorous inquiry is made at the source. The Department of Justice has the means, the facilities, and the experience readily at hand to carry on an extensive investigation into all forms of subversive activities. I join with those who praise the objectives of the Dies committee, but I deplore the poverty, denial of opportunity, poor housing, which breed the unrest which eventuates into Communist or Fascist organizations.

Mr. Speaker, I condemn the failure of the Dies committee to hear both sides of the controversy. I censure the committee for allowing its forum to be used as a sounding board for the dissemination of politics. I condemn the timing of committee testimony in the heat of a political campaign. I deplore the fact that unsupported testimony of a damaging nature was permitted without previous investigation and in open session. I regret that a committee would allow witnesses of dubious antecedents to give publicity to slanderous utterances before a tribunal which the law has surrounded with legal immunity. If these witnesses had made the same statement elsewhere, they could have been held to strict account by the reputable citizens impugned. Publicity emanating from this committee contributed to the defeat of Gov. Frank Murphy, of Michigan, and of Elmer Benson, of Minnesota.

Mr. Speaker, the opponents of the continuation of the Dies committee were allowed only 13 minutes of the entire debate today. This resolution is being railroaded through this House without careful consideration. The effect of the committee's conduct may well be to undermine the great Democratic Party. I predict that no single Republican will vote against this resolution this afternoon. Our Republican friends are gloating with glee over the fact that some Democratic partners will aid them in an effort to defeat the Democrats. Two Cabinet ministers, Ickes and Perkins, were assailed before this committee. Shall we be a party to attack upon the New Deal? I refuse to join the crew which seeks to wreck the New Deal.

Mr. Speaker, when I lose the courage to vote my convictions in this body I will resign. I refuse to cringe my knees before the whip of reaction. I refuse to offer incense upon the altar of intolerance. I quote the language of the President of the United States with reference to the Dies committee. Said Franklin D. Roosevelt:

Most fair-minded Americans hope that the committee will aban-Most fair-minded Americans hope that the committee will abandon the practice of merely providing a forum to those who for political purposes or otherwise seek headlines which they could not otherwise obtain. Mere opinion evidence has been barred in court since the American system of legislative and judicial procedure was started. * * I was disturbed * * * because a congressional committee, charged with the responsibility of investigating un-American activities, should have permitted itself to be used in a flagrantly unfair and un-American attempt to influence an election. ence an election.

By special permission I append hereto brief excerpts from magazine and newspaper comments and editorials with reference to the Dies committee. I do so because most of the periodicals quoted are conservative, politically speaking, but the comments are illuminating as illustrative of the fact that not only among all liberal organizations in the United States will be found heated opposition to the continuation of this committee, but likewise from intelligent, fair, and reasonable conservatives.

[From the Time Magazine of November 7, 1938]

Fate and Texas gave Martin Dies an impressive physique, a durable voice, a seat in Congress. Mr. Dies lately has given the United States a congressional investigation. By the standards of past masters at inquisition, his performance has not been brilliant. Ex-Senator (now Associate Justice) Hugo L. Black was at his best with a hostile witness, knowing well how to bait the trap, when to spring it. Senator Robert M. La Follerte also knows the uses of the subtle query. Mr. Dies knows chiefly how to bellow. Last week he had the thrill of seeing his bellowing affect not just the ear of some baffled layman but the tympanums of that knowing politician, the head of the Democratic Party.

To his investigation * * * Mr. Dies had brought principally * * * a willingness (common to congressional ferrets) to hear what he believes, a succession of renegade leftists, exunion officers and members turned talebearer, avowed spies, patrictic citizens bursting with information about the "reds." Mr. Dies has also taken testimony about United States Nazis and Fascists * * *. But in the main he has stayed on the "red" trail.

When the House gets around to inquire into the misuse of its power by the Dies committee, it should not fall to inquire into the circumstances surrounding the service of those subpenas. Before that time arrives, the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee may save the House some trouble by exposing the activities of the Associated Farmers, and the relations between that organization and Fascist and Nazi propagandists. Then, and not before, we may learn about the un-American activities which constitute a real threat to this country's institutions. How illuminating it would be to disthis country's institutions. How illuminating it would be to discover that persons engaged in those activities have been using the Dies committee as a loudspeaker for their propaganda. * * * *

Hundreds of thousands of words of "testimony" and "documentary evidence" have been pumped into the record without the slightest pretense of ascertaining whether it was true or false, whether the witnesses were credible or whether they were actuated by ulterior motives—as many of them so palpably were. No effort was made to protect exalted reputations against unsupported calumny. * * * This obscene and degrading hippodrome is being carried on by authority of Congress, and * * * its real aim is to defame and defeat fine public officials such as Governor Murphy and Governor Benson.

Essentially the same method has been used to make the public believe that their Government itself is honeycombed with communism, and that the end which liberal and forward-looking Government officials have in view is the establishment of a Communist state in America. In doing this the Dies committee has been engaged in its most subversive, its most destructive work. Ostensibly formed to investigate un-American activities, it has itself set out to undermine the confidence of the American people in their own Government. By equating the mildest form of liberalism with communism, the Dies committee has been trying to persuade the American people that such Government officers and other leaders as have been trying to remedy some of the most obvious abuses which have flourished under our form of democracy have, in reality, which have flourished under our form of democracy have, in reality, been traitorous reds whose real end is the destruction of American society. If such a panic can be induced, if the American people can be duped into believing that every attempt to end or lessen a social evil covers an attempt to establish communism in this country, then Mr. Dies and those who cheer him on can hope for a delivery of the Government into the hands of reaction. delivery of the Government into the hands of reaction. * * * Mr. Dies wants to go on spreading among the American people distrust of their own Government. He is about to ask Congress for almost 10 times as much money as he has already had to continue and extend his attempt to foster panic. No Congressman with the slightest sense of responsibility to America's democratic institutions can be willing to supply the Dies committee with another cent.

[From the New Haven Journal-Courier of December 5, 1938] EXTENDING DIES PROBE

Suggestions are beginning to appear at Washington for a neat way out of the difficulties of the Dies committee. The extreme anguish caused leftists by the testimony before the committee indicates that there is something in what the witnesses say. At the same time competent students of congressional procedure say the committee has been less fair, even, than some of the New Deal witch-burning expeditions. The administration naturally can't choke off the committee; an effort to do that would force a further investigation of the curious resistance the committee has met in administration quarters. administration quarters.

But why can't a compromise be struck which would meet the arguments of the leftists insofar as they go to the fairness of the procedure? Why can't Congress appropriate another sum for another committee to be staffed by persons less suspect of original bias and more solicitous of reputations than the DES group has been? That we want to keep on knowing about Fascist and Communist activities goes without saying. The overwhelming majority of Americans are middle-of-the-roaders, who will insist on that. A new committee or a correction of the procedure of the old might be the way ahead. the way ahead.

Has there ever been such a forum before for irresponsible witnesses wishing to air irrelevant, and often absurd, charges? Take for example, the statement made before the committee of a young minister that "Jimmy" Roosevelt is undermining true Americanism by not contributing to the church. "Jimmy" says he made such contributions and failed to put them in his income-tax returns, but suppose he contributed nothing. Is that a proper and relevant subject for discussion by a congressional committee which is supposed to be ferreting out the subversive elements in our society?

supposed to be ferreting out the subversive elements in our society?

And then there is the testimony of Latham R. Reed, described as a retired Army colonel. The Dies committee has just listened for a considerable time to his attacks on Secretary Ickes. A central point in the assault is that the Secretary spoke at the annual dinner of the American Civil Liberties Union in New York a year ago, and made an address which Reed regarded as "distinctly radical." His address "wound up with an unwarranted attack on the Supreme Court."

And so what? Secretary Ickes' address was published in the

And so what? Secretary Ickes' address was published in the newspapers of the country on December 9, 1937. It doesn't take a congressional committee, spending the taxpayers' money, to discover its content. And does it really make any difference whether Latham R. Reed thought it was radical?

This same witness delivered himself of some "revelations" cerning Felix Frankfurter, the distinguished law teacher at Harvard. It seems that Mr. Frankfurter is on the board of the Amervard. It seems that Mr. Frankfurter is on the board of the American Civil Liberties Union. Since his name has been on the letter-head of the organization for years, this isn't exactly news. Yet the committee solemnly questioned Reed concerning this fact, and asked if this is the same Mr. Frankfurter who is being prominently mentioned for the Supreme Court.

All of which could have been ascertained without any congressional inquiry, and with a lot less noise and excitement than this haywire Dies investigation is kicking up. Why appropriate any more money for such an irrational investigation?

[From the Seattle Daily Times of December 10, 1938] SHOULD HAVE BEEN THROWN OUT

From the start of hearings by the Dies committee the need of legal counsel, of guidance according to rules of common courtesy and common sense, has been painfully apparent. Chairman Martin Dies once practiced law, but whether because of excess zeal or bad judgment he has been sadly remiss at times in the amenities that would be required in any well-conducted courtroom. The committee's eagerness for facts has been matched by its indulgence of fantasy in listening to many witnesses; but for letting one of these babble his belief that James Roosevelt had given nothing of his income to churches or to charity, Chairman Dies and his associates can offer no acceptable excuse. Even if the tale were true, as of course it isn't, what would be the bearing upon un-American activities and propaganda? An instinct of decency should have prompted some member of the committee to halt such ridiculous and impertinent testimony and throw the witness out.

[From the Minneapolis Star of December 13, 1938] SHABBY TACTICS

[From the Tampa Morning Tribune of November 26, 1938] "PURVEYORS OF HATE"

Congressman Dies, who does entirely too much talking, has taken it upon himself, for no apparently good reason, to select what he calls an international team of "purveyors of hate." His purpose, he said, is to inform the American people that "what is happening in Europe in spreading hatred is gradually taking place happening in Europe in spreading hatred is gradually taking place in this country."

He divided his team into two divisions, one, "purveyors of class hatred," headed by Josef Stalin, and the other "purveyors of racial and religious hatred," led by Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini.

In the American division of the "purveyors of class hatred" he placed John L. Lewis, Secretary Ickes, Harry Hopkins, Earl Browder, Clarence Hathaway—who, he said, was editor of the Daily Worker—James Ford, Negro Communist; Paul Sifton, assistant to the Federal Wage and Hour Administrator; and David Saposs, economist of the National Labor Relations Board.

His selection for the American division of the "purveyors of racial and religious hatred" included Fritz Kuhn, leader of the German-American Bund, and William Pelley, whom he described as German-American Bund, and William Pelley, whom he described as head of the Silver Shirts.

DES announced that he would make additions to his "team" from time to time, saying that at the close of the year, "we may award a medal with a rattlesnake on it to the one who has performed the greatest service for hatred."

It is the privilege of the Texas Congressman to exercise his fertile brain as he pleases, but it is entirely improper for him, as a Member of Congress and the head of an important body of that Congress supposed to conduct an impartial and unprejudiced governmental investigation, to arbitrarily and opprobriously characterize and accuse any American citizen. This outburst qualifies Dies himself for a conspicuous place among his "purveyors of hate."

[From the Galveston Daily News of December 1, 1938] REPRESENTATIVE DIES' DEMANDS

Representative Dies' Demands

In a letter to Secretary Hull, Representative Dies demands prosecution of the Communist Party, the German-American Bund, and some 20 other organizations for failure to register as agents of foreign principals. If the courts were as careless about proof as Representative Dies has been in his conduct of the investigation into un-American activities, doubtless these organizations would be indicted and convicted.

All that would be necessary would be for someone to get on the witness stand and express an opinion that the accused organizations were guilty. Since courts must abide by the law and rules of evidence, however, it is unlikely that the State Department will act on Mr. Dies' demand.

If the law required registration of organizations and individuals which foster alien principles a prima facie case could be made out against the Communist Party and the German-American Bund, and perhaps some of the organizations which Representative Dies names as "fronts" for the Communist Party. But the law applies only to those who are acting directly as agents of foreign principals, whereas it is doubtful if anything more definite could be proved against the organizations Representative Dies accuses than that they derive their inspiration from foreign sources. Prosecutions can't be sustained on evidence of inspiration, of course. tion, of course.

Sometimes one is tempted to regret this limitation, but it is evident upon reflection that if the limitation were removed freedom presently would vanish in this country as completely as it has in the lands whose systems our Communists and Nazis are so anxious to have us adopt. Compelling the Communist Party and the German-American Bund to register as agents of Russian and German political organizations, or fining them for failure to register, would not affect their public standing. Any American who doesn't know what they represent is beyond enlightenment.

[From the Utica (N. Y.) Press of November 26, 1938] NOT THE MAN FOR THE JOB

The House of Representatives had a good purpose when it created a committee to investigate un-American activities. There may be many subversive movements under way which hold nothing good for the country. If this is the case, it would be wise for the Government to know the facts. By the same token, if radical propaganda has little influence, people could begin to consider more important matters.

But Representative Martin Dies, of Texas, is not the man to head any such inquiry. He has shown himself to be either gullible or motivated by personal considerations in using the committee as a sounding board for his own ideas. The public is growing a bit tired of them.

It is a waste of time, for instance, for him to say that Secretaries Ickes and Perkins should resign. He includes Harry Hopkins, of the W. P. A., in his list of administration officials who should retire. Mr. Dres must know that they will not resign merely because he says so, and he cannot force them into retirement. We might just as well say that Hitler should return to private life, but refrain from doing so because of a reluctance to be made to look ridiculous.

[From the Waco (Tex.) News-Tribune of November 30, 19381 TEXAS IS BLUSHING

Texas has furnished the man for one of the most spectacular of those publicity parades known as congressional investigations but Texas will get little satisfaction out of the show.

Congressman Marrin Dies has kept up the tradition of these congressional inquiries. He has made his as sensational as any, and he has drained the last drop of publicity out of his opportunity.

Like many others, his inquiry started out with a good purpose. The purpose is still good, but the procedure has discredited itself. The aim to expose subversive activities by any alien group, cr

High points so far have been the testimony about Shirley Temple, and Mr. Dies' vociferous plaint that Senator Connally was informed before Dies was about approval of a Government project in Texas.

Texas legislature has had a lot of experience with these blunder-buss inquiries. Usually, if there is a specific purpose, it gets lost in the divergence of ideas of committee members. But the main trouble is that such a hearing opens up the gates for the gathering of a crowd of nuts, of disgruntled or discredited people, of wild-minded fanatics on some subject, and pours their vapory imaginings is never approached.

Dies himself, in a speech before the Texas Legislature, got off a statement that implies more danger to free America, if anyone with the will was in power to carry it through, than he has exposed. He expounded the need of Government power to curb "criticism of public officials, such as yourselves." He may not hold that view now, and his work in the committee has been to afford a forum for criticism of nearly everything; and Mr. Dies has not hesitated to criticize officials, such as Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Ickes, Mr. Hopkins, and so on.

We think, however, that Mr. Dies might better spend his time defending himself and his committee. Considering his results on the $25,000 Congress originally gave considering his results on the $25,000 Congress originally gave him, Dies should be able to stage a superextravaganza if he gets his wish. The Texan probably would be willing to guarantee to find a Communist in every precinct and to unearth convincing proof George Washington was a lifelong Marxian. Anything should be possible to a statesman who has made a "red" menace out of Shirley Temple.

But for the taxpayers to spend more on this side show is another question. We all have had our laugh; the joke has gone far enough. If Dies is encouraged to pull any more red-flannel spooks from under the bed and out of the closet, the aforesaid spooks might become so numerous they would tote Representative Dies plumb away to never-never land.

[From the Minot (N. Dak.) News of December 6, 1938] "RED" HUNTING

Speaking of the Communist probe conducted by the Dies committee, which seems to have started out on a legitimate quest and then got itself snarled up, an observer writes in the Cleveland Plain Dealer:

Plain Dealer:

"We have had a lot of 'red' hunts, but none that backfired more quickly. The principal weakness of all of them is that the inquisitors have no sense of humor."

There is communism in this country, and it would be a useful public service to show its extent and operation. But obviously the American public as a whole doesn't take it very seriously. Most people would probably say that, as regards the two perils at opposite ends of our political spectrum, there is probably more danger of fascism than communism. of fascism than communism.

However that may be, it is obviously better for an inquisitorial body to cover both of these alien systems than to concentrate on one and ignore the other. Also, when conducting hearings on any matter of controversy, to hear both sides.

"Mrs. Hallie Flanagan (director of W. P. A. Federal Theater projects). I want it put into the record that Christopher Marlowe was a noted playwright in the days of Shakespeare."

In other words, Congressman Starnes apparently was more determined to see red—whether it was there or not—than he was to learn whether real Communists were boring from within the Federal theater.

learn whether real Communists were boring from within the Federal theater.

As to the matter of Jimmy Roosevelt's church contributions, we think that was a new record low for any congressional investigation. Says Raymond Clapper in his Washington column:

"In 20 years of Washington reporting I have seen a vast quantity of smearing done before congressional investigating committees, but none that outdoes this job. And so far as the published accountants indicate, no member of the Dies committee raised one word of protest against this smear, which in addition to everything else that could be said against it, apparently did young Jimmy Roosevelt the additional injustice of being based on an assumption exactly contrary to the real fact."

The main trouble with the Dies committee, we think, is that it never has been able to keep its eyes on the ball.

[From the Charlotte (N. C.) News of December 7, 1938] A MINISTER OFFSIDE

A MINISTER OFFSIDE

For tops in bad taste and something more we herewith nominate the Rev. Howard Stone Anderson, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Washington. The gentleman is the same who yesterday lamented that in son Jimmy Roosevelt's income-tax returns he was unable to find any contributions to churches among the infinitesimal charities son Jimmy had listed.

Son Jimmy says that, in fact, he had contributed to churches but simply hadn't put the contributions down. But what if he hadn't? This is supposed to be a free country in which every man is at liberty to follow the dictates of his own conscience—about contributing to churches, as well as belonging to them, among other things. You may believe that it is the moral duty of all men to contribute to churches, but that is only what you believe, and you have no right at all to attempt to force that belief on other men. Nor does the fact that a man happens to be the son of the President of the United States deprive him of the privilege of the President of the United States deprive him of the privilege of giving as he pleases or doesn't please.

Like son Jimmy or dislike him—and he is not one of our favor-ites—he must be conceded equal rights with the lowliest and most obscure of private citizens. One right fundamental to de-cency and fair play is the disposal of his own money in whatever way he chooses and without accounting to ministers or the Dies poetry about me."

And the lady of literary pretensions who said she considered Scott's Emulsion the best thing he ever wrote.

Scott's Emulsion the best thing he ever wrote.

Congressman Starnes has unwittingly revealed one of the reasons why the Dies committee has fumbled so many of its opportunities. The W. P. A. theater projects were started on the theory that unemployed actors, like unemployed carpenters, should have a chance to keep on with the kind of work for which they are best fitted. We think it's unquestionably true that the projects have employed a good many people who never did and never can earn their living as professional actors. And many of its plays have seemed to promote some pretty strange and startling doctrines, social, economic, and political.

The Dies investigation might have shed valuable light on the extent to which real Communists have bored from within the Federal theater, using the taxpayers' money to propagandize for un-American principles.

American principles.

But Congressman STARNES evidently determining to see red whether it's there or not, has turned that phase of the inquiry into a farce by asking one question.

[From the Decatur (III.) Herald of November 24, 1938] SLANDER

About the most outrageous libel yet perpetrated by the congressional investigating committee headed by reactionary Marrin Dies is that one in which Secretary Harold Ickes is called a Communist because he is alleged to have given support to the American Civil Liberties Haron Civil Liberties Union.

Civil Liberties Union.

The witness brought before the committee could testify only to a suspicion that Mr. Ickes is now or ever has been a member of the Civil Liberties Union. No matter; the unsupported statement of one man, reputation and character unknown, is used by Congressman Dies to put headlines in newspapers the country over linking the Secretary's name with Communist doctrine. The truth is tardy in catching up with insinuations of this sort.

But supposing it should be shown that Mr. Ickes actually was a member, or contributor to the Civil Liberties Union—what then? Would that prove him a Communist, or a person of Communist sympathies?

sympathies?

The answer is that, if it is communistic to support the Civil Libertles Union, then it is communistic to support the Constitution of the United States. That is all the Civil Libertles Union ever has attempted to do. Composed of high-minded lawyers, educators, and other patriots, this organization has assumed that the individual rights guaranteed by the Constitution mean what they say. When Tom Girdler, millionaire president of a steel company, wants to use his right of free speech to denounce the Government, and when a radical labor organizer wants to use the constitutional right of free speech to denounce the Government, the Civil Libertles Union holds that both are entitled to speak without interference. That is Americanism, if Americanism can be defined by any of the official documents on which this country was built.

If Mr. Ickes is not a member of the Civil Libertles Union, it is regrettable, as every real believer in the democratic system of government who can afford it ought to be.

[From the Charlotte (N. C.) News of November 23, 1938] SPOTTING TREASON

Spotting Treason

Yesterday appeared before the Dies committee Alice Lee Jemison. Alice Lee is a Yosemite Indian, and she holds a nice job as Washington lobbyist for an organization calling itself the American Indian Federation. And what Alice Lee had to tell was terrific—simply terrific. And sinister—my, my, you have no idea how sinister. Alice Lee had the lowdown on Harold Ickes, Indian Commissioner John Collier—yea, and on Congress itself.

What Alice Lee told Mr. Dies, that great defender of the Republic, was that, to her knowledge, Ickes and Collier have actually expressed a belief in the principles of the American Civil Liberties Union. And Congress—believe it or not, Congress has actually passed some laws recommended by the Civil Liberties Union.

Ourselves, we are simply appalled at the shocking news. This Civil Liberties Union, we knew all along, has some "reds" and a good many more "pinks" on its committee, but we had sort of excused it on the score that it had more liberals. But now we look it up, and what do you think are its principles? Why, the defense of the Bill of Rights in the Constitution of the United States. The defense of the right of free speech and assembly for all comers, precisely as that Bill of Rights provides. Think of all comers, precisely as that Bill of Rights provides. Think of Ickes and Collier actually confessing to belief in such principles. Think of Congress daring to be so un-American as to enact laws in defense of such basic American rights. Alice Lee and Mr. DIES—let us never overlook Mr. DIES—deserve a roar of thanks for having unearthed such nefarious doings in high places.

[From the Kansas City Journal of November 30, 1938] ANOTHER DUD

Chairman Dies, of the House Committee on Un-American Activicharman Dies, of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, urges the State Department to invoke against certain Communist and Nazi organizations a law requiring the registration of agents of foreign principals. No doubt the registration of those whose activity comes within the meaning of the law is desirable. It would, for one thing, discourage the noisy investigation of their activities by congressional committees whose members are not averse to correctional stump speeches on their own account. Disregarding to occasional stump speeches on their own account. Disregarding that for the moment, it is enlightening to investigate the origin of that for the moment, it is enlightening to investigate the origin of the law which Mr. Diss would invoke.

It is the one and only result of a similar "sensational" investigation by a congressional committee in 1934. The Fish committee of 8 years ago made an even worse showing. Of its 14 recommencations made to Congress, none was enacted. If the Dies committee lives up to the average, it would, after its tumult and shouting, cause the enactment of one-half of a law. And that fraction, if the average still held, would be of dubious value.

Congressional investigators have a habit of straying afield and becoming embroiled in domestic politics. Mr. Diss is an anti-New Dealer. His committee's principal concern has not been the infiltration of Nazi and Communist doctrines, but in a ridiculous attempt to smear the national administration. National "menaces" take form as they are dreamed by committee chairmen, who also are authors of the resolutions authorizing the investigations.

The Dies committee will adjourn without having made a substantial contribution to the Nation's understanding of threatening menaces from abroad. It leaves only the echo of acrimonious partisanship, providing additional evidence that illegal activity by Hitsanship, providing additional evidence that illegal activity by Hit-lerites and Bolsheviks lies properly in the sphere of the Justice

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield all the remaining time, with the exception of one-half minute, to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I understand there are 3 minutes remaining on this side. I am glad to yield that time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. In view of the fact that the gentleman has 3 minutes remaining and he has not yielded any of his time to anyone opposed to the resolution, would he not yield 2 of the 3 remaining minutes to me?

Mr. MAPES. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I have endeavored to take care of the time on this side for those who desired to speak on this side, as is the custom, and I have agreed to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Texas; otherwise I would be able to accommodate the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] is recognized. [Applause.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen of the House, this campaign of abuse and misrepresentation is no new thing. I hold in my hand a pamphlet which was issued and distributed shortly after this committee began its investigation, in which a number of Members of Congress, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Coffee], the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook], Miss Frances Perkins, and Harold L. Ickes, and others, attacked this committee. From the beginning there was a well-organized attempt to discredit this committee by misrepresentation and by ridicule. Before the committee ever began its work we invited John L. Lewis to appear before us and give us the benefit of any information or facts that he might have. He did not see fit to accept this invitation. Then, when the Non-Partisan League attacked us, the chairman of the committee wrote to the league and challenged them to appear before the committee and deny under oath, if they could do so, the charges that had been made. We repeatedly extended invitations to those individuals and organizations which were involved in any charge to appear before the committee and answer the charge. In spite of the invitations, those individuals and organizations did not appear, but resorted to their agreed strategy of ridicule and misrepresentation.

The charge has been made that it was the concerted effort of this committee to smear the New Deal. I challenge any Member of this House to read the report and to read the respectful, polite letters which we wrote to the heads of departments, in pursuance to the request of the House, contained in the resolution; letters in which we were carrying out your mandate when we requested the heads of the departments to supply us with adequate aid; and then I challenge any Member to read the replies, consider the long delays and the attitude of contempt. Could we have intended or could it have been the design of the committee to smear the administration when we were begging the heads of the departments, New Dealers like Cummings and Hopkins, to furnish us with the investigators and the attorneys to do the investigating?

Yet, in spite of these facts, in spite of the record, those Members who appeared before the Rules Committee during the past 3 days saw fit to resort to personal abuse and vilification.

Let me say to the House that while this committee undoubtedly made some mistakes, yet I am reminded of the fact that another body gave another committee $155,000 and that the departments of this Government supplied that committee with numerous investigators, attorneys, and assistants. In spite of all the aid that the other committee received, they placed on the stand certain well-known Communists to attack American businessmen. [Applause.] I make this statement not to charge that that committee did it intentionally, but to illustrate the fact that a committee furnished with all the aid they needed nevertheless did make mistakes. You did not, however, hear the outcry, such as has come from certain sections and from certain people in this country against our committee. Why?

Let me make this further remark, that no chairman, and no committee can conduct a fair, a fearless, and an honest investigation without arousing and incurring the enmity and the hatred and the bitterness of those whom it investigates.

Mr. Speaker, this committee with inadequate funds, struggling under great handicaps, harassed and molested, and yet doing everything in its power to render a patriotic service to this country-in spite of all this, nevertheless gave to the Nation a unanimous report, a report based upon facts and not upon opinions or hearsay.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

Mr. DIES. No; my time is too limited.

Mr. Speaker, if this investigation is continued this committee is going to recognize such mistakes as were made. and is going to do everything within its power to continue a fearless, an honest, and a sincere investigation of what is a definite danger to the stability and the life of America. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. In view of the gentleman's statement, will not the gentleman start an investigation of propaganda such as we see in the morning's paper, "Nazis call F. D. Bolshevist"? We know that is a lie.

Mr. DIES. This committee spent a large part of its funds investigating Nazi and Fascist activities in this country. We sent an investigator all over the United States, and during the last days, when our money was being rapidly exhausted, nevertheless, we investigated numerous so-called Nazi and Fascist organizations. In spite of bona fide and honest efforts to investigate nazi-ism, nevertheless, those who are opposed to an investigation of communism began to disseminate propaganda all over this country that the committee was sympathetic with the Nazis, sympathetic with the Fascists. Why did they do this? What is there about this thing that brings about such a hue and cry? We Democrats do not fear an honest and fearless exposure of communism. Everybody knows the Democratic Party is not in sympathy with communism. The Democrats of this Nation are Americans. [Applause.] And I resent this misrepresentation; I resent it; I resent it.

I did not attack a Cabinet officer until certain Cabinet officers went out of their way to attack an independent agency of this Congress. I love this Congress. My father served in this House for 10 years. [Applause.] And during all the time he was here he defended the integrity, the dignity, and the prerogatives of this House. When, therefore, Cabinet officers-appointive officials of the Government-went out of their way not merely to attack me, for I am merely an humble and insignificant member of a great body-when they attacked this committee they attacked the greatest deliberative body on earth, and I resented such action. [Applause.] I say this in justification.

May I also express my deep gratitude to the members of this committee for their loyalty and their courage. There was a time when our backs were against the wall, when radical writers were trying to besmear us with deliberate lies and misrepresentation. There was a time when powerful forces were turned loose for the deliberate purpose of destroying an investigation that was honestly and sincerely undertaking to do a patriotic service to the people of this country. Let me say further that the real liberals have nothing to fear from an honest investigation, for true liberals are as much opposed to communism as are the conservatives.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield

Mr. DIES. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. CELLER. I am glad to note that the gentleman says he will rectify some of the errors. Will he retain skillful and adroit counsel and will he follow counsel's advice to sift facts from fiction?

Mr. DIES. The chairman of this committee will do what he did before, everything in his power to render an honest and patriotic service. [Applause.]

Let me say this to the gentleman and let me say it to other Members of this House, that no one can deny that the intolerant ideologies of Europe have been transplanted to our shores. The quarrels and the feuds of the Old World have been transferred to America. No one can deny that insidious forces are seeking to change the structure of this Government by intrigue and by violence. Yet I hear Members of Congress accuse me of seeking to hurt my administration, or to hurt my party.

I am thinking of one whose memory will ever dwell in my heart and for whom I entertained profound love and devotion. He left me as a priceless heritage a record in this House which was distinguished by courage and patriotism. No man loved the Democratic Party more than he did. And yet at a moment of crisis he did not hesitate to place his country above partisanship. I would be unworthy of him and the heritage of unselfish service which he left me if I did not place the interest of our beloved country above what some misguided partisans conceive to be the interest of the party.

As a matter of fact, this is not a partisan question. Here we are dealing with the life of America, with the fundamentals, with that concerning which all men of all parties, of all races, and of all creeds can unite in a common defense.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman has not answered the question. Will the gentleman hire a lawyer to help him?

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. If, as a matter of fact, there is anything wrong within the councils of the Government of the United States and the Democratic Party is in charge of the Government, is it not the duty of our party to see that it comes out, and is that not the only purpose of this committee?

Mr. DIES. I would rather the Democrats take the initiative and show courage than to leave it to some other party

Mr. Speaker, can it be said that we have erred in exposing men prominent in this Government who by their own admissions subscribe to communism? Can it be said that we erred in going into certain labor unions and showing by uncontradicted evidence, by the testimony of officials and members of the union itself, that here were Communists who had infiltrated the legitimate labor unions, had seized strategic positions, and were converting those labor unions into instrumentalities of class warfare? Were we being partisan when we gave to the American people facts with respect to those matters? Were we being partisan when we exposed one situation in the city of New York on the Federal Writers project whereby, through their own admission, 103 out of 300 employees being supported by the money of loyal American citizens, were members of the Communist Party?

Mr. Speaker, I submit that America comes before all questions of partisanship. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.] Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amendment to the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 8, strike out the figures "1941" and insert in lieu thereof "1940."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. Norton, Mr. Marcantonio, and Mr. Dunn) there wereayes 320, noes 27.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 344, nays 35, answered "present" 2, not voting 51, as follows:

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey is not

Mrs. NORTON. I desire to vote, if I may, Mr. Speaker, I was not in the House when my name was called. I was called out.

The SPEAKER. Under the circumstances stated by the gentlewoman from New Jersey, unless she was in Hall of the House and listening and failed to hear her name called, she does not qualify.

Mrs. NORTON. I was in the Hall of the House but was called out and came back, and my name had been called.

Was the gentlewoman present when her The SPEAKER. name was called?

Mrs. NORTON. No; I was not present.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman does not qualify under the rule.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I was sitting in this chair while the gentlewoman was sitting there, and she did not hear her name called. I was right alongside of her.

Mrs. NORTON. I did not hear my name called, but I was in the House.

The SPEAKER. If the gentlewoman was in the House and failed to hear her name called-

Mrs. NORTON. I was. I was sitting here most of the time, but whether or not I was here when my name was called I am not sure.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again submit to the gentlewoman from New Jersey the inquiry which is the universal rule for qualifying. Was the gentlewoman in the Hall of the House and listening and failed to hear her name?

Mrs. NORTON. I was in the House. I did not hear my name called. I was in the House part of the time, Mr. Speaker, but I was not in the House all the time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Was the gentlewoman in the Hall of the House and listening and failed to hear her name? That is the universal qualification.

Mrs. NORTON. Everybody here seems to think that.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman was sitting right here. She was in the House when her name was called and did not hear it.

Mrs. NORTON. Do I qualify, Mr. Speaker? If I do qualify, I will vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman qualifies and votes "yea."

Let there be no misunderstanding. The Chair repeatedly inquired of the gentlewoman from New Jersey, and the Chair understood the gentlewoman to say it was her best judgment that she was in the Hall listening and failed to hear her

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I believe every Member would like to see the gentlewoman vote, but a very vital question is involved in respect of the precedents of the House. My understanding is that in order to qualify, a Member must answer affirmatively that the Member was in the Hall and failed to hear his name called; and to say that is true to his best judgment does not meet the test.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia did not fully state the qualifications. The Member must also be listening and fail to hear his name called.

In order that there may be no confusion, and in order to preserve the precedents of the House, the Chair submits to the gentlewoman the inquiry, Does she qualify under the rule just stated?

Mrs. NORTON. I believe I do qualify, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot question the statement of the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mr. MAPES. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. I do this merely for the purpose of getting a chance to make an observation as to a phrase I believe the Speaker overlooked in his statement. It is not "Was the Member in the House listening?" but "Was the Member in the House listening when his name was called?".

The SPEAKER. The Chair will accept the statement of the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mr. MAPES. I have the same feeling as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum]. I should be glad to have the gentlewoman from New Jersey vote, but it is a matter of establishing a precedent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia very correctly stated the rule. The gentlewoman from New Jersey, as the Chair understands, states as a Member that she believes and, as the Chair construes it, that it is her best recollection and judgment that she does qualify.

How does the gentlewoman vote?

Mrs. NORTON. I vote "yea," Mr. Speaker.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded; and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF VOTE

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. Satterfield, is detained at home by illness in his family. If he had been present, he would have voted "yea" on the resolution just passed.

I wish also to say that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Drewry] was unavoidably detained and would have voted "yea."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record, and include therein a brief article by Mr. David *awrence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF VOTE

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, Messrs. Seger, Rodgers of Pennsylvania, Risk, McLean, Johnson of Indiana, Wigglesworth, Angell, Williams of Delaware, Bender, Carter, Bolton, Dondero, Harter of New York, and Jeffries, were unavoidably absent either through illness or on account of Government business. Had they been present, they would have voted "yea" on the Dies resolution.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Leavy] is unavoidably detained because of illness, thereby depriving him of his right to vote on the Dies resolution.

ADJOURMENT OVER

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. White of Idaho asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the Record.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein telegrams between myself and a former Governor of West Virginia, the Honorable John J. Cornwell, on my stand on the continuation of the Dies committee. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] what length of time was given under his request with respect to extension of remarks on the Dies resolution?

Mr. COX. Five legislative days.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a few telegrams and letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein an editorial from the Springfield Daily News headed "False and Silly, Says Congressman Casey."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I received unanimous consent to insert in the Record an address by Hon. Sumner Welles, the Under Secretary of State. Today I have received word from the Public Printer that the speech will cover two and a half pages of the Record, or one-half page over the limit. I therefore renew my request to insert the speech in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a resolution adopted at the national convention of the United Spanish War Veterans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in revising the remarks I made on the floor today I may include a few brief editorials relating to the subject matter.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, are these editorials of any considerable length?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I had unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by including a certain article in the Record. I am now advised by the Public Printer that the article will take about four pages, and I therefore renew my unanimous-consent request to include the article in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a resolution passed by the Legislature of the great State of Wyoming.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. Murdock of Arizona asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] is recognized for 45 minutes.

FOREIGN TRADE-THE ROAD TO PEACE AND PROSPERITY

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, in his recent Jackson Day speech, the President described some of his Republican critics as "straddlebugs." Just who he had in mind I do not undertake to say, but when a Republican Member of this House places one foot on a sound fiscal policy and the other on the Pelion of a $4,000,000,000 old-age pension scheme, he is making a right wide stretch. And when a Republican of this House advocates a restoration of foreign trade and at the same time condemns our reciprocal-trade agreement program, the stretch at the moment may not be so apparent, but the inconsistency is just as deep and significant.

A NONPARTISAN PROGRAM

For a long time American leaders of political thought, regardless of party affiliation, have frankly admitted that we cannot hope to sell abroad unless we are willing to buy from abroad. That principle was aptly stated just a few days ago by the Republican nominee for Vice President in 1936, Col. Frank Knox, of Chicago, who said:

To sell American farm products abroad, we must buy some of what our foreign customers have to sell. You cannot always sell and never buy in foreign trades.

And he added:

To attempt to help the farmer by promising him higher and higher tariffs on his products is naught but a red herring drawn across the trail to divert him from attack on the excessively high tariff rates on domestic manufactures. It is time that the farmer recognizes this for what it is.

The position on this important issue, which is fundamentally an economic and not a political, partisan issue, thus taken by Colonel Knox is supported by public opinion as indicated by recent polls of the Institute of Public Opinion. The proposal to negotiate a trade agreement with Great Britain was, by a Gallup poll conducted in March 1938, supported by 79 percent of the Democrats and 61 percent of the Republicans. The second question, dealing with a reduction in our tariffs in return for reductions in British rates, was favored by 76 percent of the Democrats and 66 percent of the Republicans. A September poll conducted by Who's Who indicated that 86 percent of those who answered favored a trade agreement with the United Kingdom. An institute poll conducted last December, on the eve of the Lima Conference, indicated that 8 out of every 10 voters who had formed an opinion about the work of the Secretary of State favored his efforts to break down tariff barriers to international trade.

Trade reciprocity has been supported by a long line of distinguished Republicans as well as Democrats, dating primarily from the famous Buffalo speech of President McKinley, when he said:

The period of exclusiveness is past. Commercial wars are unprofitable; reciprocity treaties are in harmony with the spirit of the times; measures of retaliation are not.

That speech was delivered by the illustrous McKinley shortly after his embarrassing experience of having a Republican Senate refuse to ratify a series of reciprocal-trade agreements which he had tediously and conscientiously negotiated. Yet, with full knowledge of the lobbying power of tariff-protected interests—which reached its highest and most disgusting fruition in 1930 when Grundy was able to have his name linked with Hawley and Smoot as patrons of the bill—there are those today who insist that no trade agreement shall become effective until ratified by the Senate. That suggestion comes from no true friend of the expansion of our foreign trade but rather from those who are either opposed to the program in toto or else opposed to the program as it affects some particular interest.

It may interest some of my Republican colleagues who have not followed Al Smith's injunction to "take a look at the record" to know that McKinley's stand on reciprocity has subsequently been supported by such Republican leaders as former Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson; Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes; the former Ambassador to Chile, Hon. William S. Culbertson, whose book on the subject is the best that has ever been published; former Chairman of the Tariff Commission Robert L. O'Brien; the great statistician, Roger W. Babson; the former president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, Harper Sibley; the beloved editor, William Allen White; and the outstanding educator.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler. Many prominent Republican bankers are to be found—James P. Warburg and Winthrop W. Aldrich, the latter the son of one tariff maker and the brother of another. We find the program supported by such industrial leaders as Alfred P. Sloan, of General Motors; James Ford Bell, of General Mills; Eliott Wadsworth, who, in addition to being interested in New England manufacturing, is president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce.

If time permitted, I could name many more leading Republicans in support of my contention that a partisan, isolationist tariff policy died with what William Allen White aptly described as the "golden era of dollar diplomacy." When as a nation we embarked upon the dangerous and turbulent sea of imperialism, we conceived the fallacious and erroneous idea that we could become rich and a dominant power in world trade by selling to the other nations of the world and refusing to them the right to sell to us.

ATTITUDE OF THE PRESS

If I had time, I could quote leading editorials from such papers as the Berkshire Eagle, the Boston Herald, the Springfield Republican, the Hartford Courant, the Kansas City Star, the Washington Post, the Herald Tribune, the Terre Haute Star, the Oregon Journal, the Philadelphia Bulletin, and so forth, the consensus of whose opinion was thus expressed by the Boston Herald on November 18 last, when it said:

The most intelligent of New England Republicans and Democrats have approved of the underlying principles of the Hull program. They have become impatient at subsidies, restrictions, quotas, discriminations, high duties, and other brakes on the free movement of international trade. The fear locally has been that our own industries would not be safeguarded as carefully as the agricultural activities of the Middle West. To date it is a pleasure to say the predictions of disaster have not come true. We have not been penalized. Even our boot and shoe industry, which seemed to be threatened by the Hull agreement with Czechoslovakia, is still doing very nicely.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. For a very brief question.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman spoke awhile ago of Czechoslovakia and its threat to the shoe trade. Mr. ROBERTSON. That was a quotation from a Boston paper. I merely said what the Boston paper said.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. May I quote some departmental figures?

Mr. ROBERTSON. In the lady's own time.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. When the German army of occupation went into Czechoslovakia, of course Czechoslovakia did not send so many shoes to this country.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I quoted from the Boston paper, and if the gentlewoman from Massachusetts wishes later to insert some figures, she, of course, has that privilege.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert some figures at this point, if the gentleman is willing.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Oh, not in my speech.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Then immediately after the gentleman's speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Cooper). Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusets? There was no objection.

A BOOST FOR CORN

Mr. ROBERTSON. As to the reference in that editorial to promoting the interests of the Middle West, I desire to remind my colleagues from that area of the fact that in 1938 exports of corn amounted to 147,505,000 bushels—the highest since 1921. And I cannot picture a single Representative of a commercial corn State that will be subject to the compulsory control, under certain conditions, of the 1938 Farm Act who would not prefer an export market that would justify normal production at a fair price to a compulsory reduction program to accomplish that objective.

FACTS TO BE FACED

The fact that I have not spoken often on the floor of the House during the past 6 years should not be taken as an indication of the fact that I have not felt deeply about the economic problems that confronted us. But there have been times when I frankly did not know what was best to be done, and there have been other times when my views on economic problems have been so wholly at variance with those entertained by a majority of this House that to have publicly urged my views upon such a majority would have been an act of futility.

Out of the experimental program of the past 6 years, and we must frankly admit that much of it was experimental, certain fundamental facts are gradually emerging which should be realistically faced. One of those facts is that as long as we have a serious unemployment problem, so long will we resort to deficit financing as a means of meeting it. Equally as clear, I think, is the fact that if we continue deficit financing long enough we will wind up in bankruptcy. My primary purpose in imposing today upon your time and patience is to endorse a chart for our ship of state that will steer clear of that rock. I have served long enough with the minority Members of this House who have been here with me since the Seventy-third Congress to fully appreciate their ability, their high-mindedness, and their patriotism, and no one would repudiate more quickly or more indignantly than I any suggestion that the Republican Members of this House would be a party to any program to sink our country-their country as well as mine-for a temporary political advantage.

A PLEA TO BUSINESS

And so, in a spirit of "sweet reasonableness," eliminating, I hope, all sectionalism and all thought of the fact that I am a "bred in the bone" Democrat, I will undertake to present to those who are either opposed to the reciprocal-tradeagreement program or skeptical of its benefits my firm belief that the possibility of currency inflation is a threat to the perpetuity of representative democracy; that the best way to safeguard against currency inflation is the reemployment in private industry of those now on the relief rolls; and that the most practical way to bring about reemployment in private industry is for business men to courageously put idle funds to work in expanding both their domestic and foreign markets, supporting reciprocal-trade agreements as the best medium for expanding export trade.

And I make this plea for trade agreements not only to my colleagues in the House but to all of the businessmen of the Nation, both big and little, who have so frequently said during recent years that the trouble with business is lack of confidence. Currency inflation will ruin them financially, as well as it will ruin us politically, and currency inflation, as I now view the political and economic situation, is the only real fear at the root of the present psychology of timidity. There may be a few business leaders who think that the "golden era of dollar diplomacy" is not dead and buried; a few who may think that if they can bring about the downfall of the Democratic Party in 1940 the Republican Party would promptly wipe from the statute books all of the reforms of the past 6 years. If there be any such, they are engaging in pipe dreams and suffering from a sad delusion. In my opinion, the rank and file of businessmen, whether big or little businessmen, subscribe to Lincoln's theory that "trade knows no politics." Naturally, they want to save themselves from disaster and, of course, in saving themselves they will also save the country.

"Estimate in press.

It shows the direct and intimate connection between foreign trade and domestic employment of an industrial character. Incidentally, this table likewise is proof of the fact that business does lack confidence. You will note, for instance, that at the peak of our prosperity in 1929 bank deposits in round figures amounted to $57,910,000,000, currency in circulation amounted to $4,746,000,000, and the annual rate of turn-over in the New York City banks was In 1938, bank deposits exceeded those of 1929 by approximately a billion and a half dollars, and currency in circulation exceeded that of 1929 by approximately $2,000,-000,000—the highest in the history of the Nation—yet the annual rate of turn-over in the New York City banks reached the all-time low in November 1938 of 24.7. Money was plentiful; money was cheap, and yet money was idle.

Now, let us examine the figures during the 10-year period from 1929 to 1938 dealing with foreign trade and the national income. In 1929 our exports were $5,240,995,000, and our imports were $4,399,361,000, and our national income was at the high of $78,556,000,000. Now, I frankly ask every Republican of this House who laid any bricks in the tariff wall of 1930 to look at the figures for foreign trade and national income for 1932, when that isolationist policy had become thoroughly effective, and when we were at the bottom of what most economists frankly admit was largely a man-made depression. Exports had dropped to $1,611,016,000, imports had dropped to $1,322,774,000, and the national income had dropped over $33,000,000,000. And as foreign trade fell off, industrial employment fell off, and, of course, industrial production fell off.

Last October I heard a broadcast from Detroit to the effect that of the 900,000 employable men in Detroit, 300,000 were unemployed. I believe we now have 29,705,220 motor vehicles in use in this country and are exporting about 10 percent of our total production, the production figures for 1937 being 4,808,974, of which 475,914 were exported. Even a greater percentage of production was exported in 1938. Should we lose that foreign market, unemployment in the motor industry will become a permanent as well as a serious problem, unless we are foolish enough to believe that we can have two cars in every garage and no saturation point.

When he was Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hoover, who was made the unwilling and unhappy victim of the high-tariff policies of the Republican leaders of 1930, contended that our foreign trade furnished employment for not less than 2,000,000 workers. The figures in the table before referred to show that with the loss of our foreign trade employment in industry was reduced by nearly a million men, and many other allied workers lost employment through indirect effects.

SOME PERTINENT FIGURES

Now, let us see what happened after our great Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, commenced his program in 1934 to break down the trade barriers that had thus hamstrung our prosperity. Each year since the inauguration of that program there has been an increase in our exports, an increase in our imports, an increase in the number of persons employed, an increase in industrial production—except for the temporary recession of 1938-and an increase in our national income. Commencing with the low of exports in 1932 of $1,611,016,000, they rose in 1938 to $3,094,095,000, and our imports rose from $1,322,774,000 to $1,960,528,000, according to figures recently released by the Department of Commerce and showing a favorable balance of trade of over a billion dollars. Frankly, I am not as much concerned over the amount of our favorable trade balance as I am over the manner in which it is brought about. Much of our 1938 trade balance was settled by imported gold, and we already have more gold than we know what to do with.

DOLLAR REVALUATION

I would not be giving you the full picture of what this administration has done to restore foreign trade if I failed to mention the devaluation of the dollar in January 1934. England went off the gold standard in 1931 and the British pound dropped in value until it reached the low of $3.10. Had the Hoover administration devalued the dollar at the same time that Great Britain went off the gold standard, the curtailment of our export trade would not have been so drastic. When we went off the gold standard the British pound was quoted at about $3.75, and the currencies of other countries in respect of the dollar were at an even lower ratio.

The future contingency of a marked disparity between our currency and that of Great Britain is covered by article XVIII of the agreement with the United Kingdom, which provides that—

If a wide variation occurs in the rate of exchange between the dollar and the pound sterling which either Government considers so substantial as to prejudice its industries or commerce, it may propose negotiations for the modification of the agreement and, if no agreement can be reached on the proposal, it may terminate the entire agreement on 30 days' notice.

EFFECTS OF TRADE AGREEMENTS

Those interested in the subject of tariffs and quotas from an international standpoint would do well to read the chapter on that subject on page 166, et sequitur, of the World Economic Survey for 1937-38 by the Economic Intelligence Service of the League of Nations. In that report I quote this pertinent sentence:

During recent years, the most important and most effective movement toward the removal of quotas and the reduction of tariffs has been the development of the American policy of negotiating reciprocal-trade agreements based on the most-favored-nation clause * * The countries with which trade agreements were in operation at the end of 1937 accounted for over a third of the total foreign trade of the United States and, with the conclusion of the new negotiations then announced, nearly 60 percent of the United States foreign trade would be with trade-agreement countries. The trade agreements enabled American exports to trade-agreement countries to expand between 1934-35 and 1936-37 more quickly than her exports to other markets; but during the same period, American imports from trade-agreement countries have increased less rapidly

Time will not permit me to refer to the many editorials and news items from the public press dealing with the marked increase of our foreign trade under the trade-agreement program, but I cannot refrain from mentioning the following headline from the Milwaukee Journal of December 31, 1938:

Export trade assures jobs.

Subheadline:

Milwaukee foreign orders of $65,000,000 support 36,000 people.

The article in question concludes with this observation:

Exports to these people mean "three square meals a day, a roof over their heads, and a little joy in life."

A Department of Commerce bulletin of August 13, 1938, states that during the calendar year 1937 the value of American exports to agreement countries was 65.6 percent greater than the average of 1934–35, while exports to all nonagreement countries in the same period increased only 44.2 percent. For the 12-month period of 1938 the increase to agreement countries was 66.2 percent against 47.7 percent for nonagreement countries. This trend is illustrated by the following Department of Commerce table:

[Millions of dollars]

The publication, The Agricultural Situation, December 1938, page 9, by the Department of Agriculture, stated:

In spite of the distorting effect on trade data produced by drought, fluctuations in industrial activity, and a number of other factors during the past 4 years, available data on foreign trade in agricultural products indicate that trade agreements have substantially benefited American farmers. Agricultural exports to countries with which trade agreements were in effect by 1937 have risen many times more rapidly than those to other countries.

I submit that such evidence is not only the best proof of the actual results of trade agreements but the only evidence that is really pertinent.

The following table constitutes the official record:

Exports and imports of agricultural products with agreement and nonagreement countries

	Year ending June 30 1937–38	Increase (+) or de- crease (-) 1937-38 over 1935-36

In the quotation above from the Economic Intelligence Service of the League of Nations I hope the words "based on the most-favored-nation clause" did not pass unnoticed because that principle in some Republican quarters has been the recent subject of criticism, but evidently without knowledge of the fact that the most-favored-nation principle had a distinct Republican origin. Again I invite the attention of my Republican friends to William S. Culbertson's book, Reciprocity, in which he extols the virtues of the principle and claims for the Republican Party full credit for it. Chief Justice Hughes, when Secretary of State, strongly endorsed the principle, and in a letter to Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, March 13, 1924, said:

As we seek pledges from other foreign countries that they will refrain from practicing discrimination we must be ready to give such pledges, and history has shown that these pledges can be made adequate only in terms of unconditional most-favored-nation treatment. We should seek simplicity and good will as the fundamental conditions of international commerce.

Secretary of Commerce Hoover concurred in the views of Secretary of State Hughes and wrote him on January 3, 1923:

I am inclined to agree with the policy suggested in your letter and would be in favor of confining representations on the part of the United States to a request for most-favored-nation treatment. * * *

Critics of the unconditional most-favored-nation policy apparently fail to understand that we only extend our tradeagreement concessions to other countries in return for valuable concessions. The foreign countries give us similar nondiscriminatory treatment in our trade with them. Furthermore opponents fail to mention that in general the tariff concessions granted in any trade agreement relate to products of which the country in question is the principal or an important source of our total imports of such products, or as under the flexible provisions, the chief competing country. These concessions are generally of secondary interest to third countries. The effects, however, of the extension of the concessions to other countries are taken fully into account in the course of the studies leading up to all concessions.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman was speaking about his statement in the publication The Agricultural Situation.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. BUCK. In the Congressional Record, issue of January 23, 1939—in the extension of my own remarks—I inserted two tables quoted from their December 1938 issue, which illustrate the statement which the gentleman made. If the gentleman has not already prepared those figures for his own speech, I wonder if it would not be appropriate to quote them again, because the gentleman's remarks are clearing this situation up very nicely.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I appreciate the interruption as helpful, but I follow what I have just said with this table of exports and imports of agricultural products with agreement and nonagreement countries.

Mr. BUCK. I think that covers the situation.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That shows that the domestic imports with the 16 agreement countries increased 102 percent. I believe I have the table to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. BUCK. That ought to show that we can certainly develop our foreign export markets through those agreements without sacrificing our domestic economy.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Undoubtedly so, and the burden of my present theme is that unless we trade—and by trading I mean buying as well as selling—we are in for serious domestic trouble that may eventuate in some form of currency inflation which will be ruinous to everyone.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ROBERTSON. Gladly, to the distinguished chairman of my committee.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will not the increase in the total national income of the farmer since the reciprocal-trade agreements went into effect over the years prior to that conclusively prove the point the gentleman is making?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The opponents of the program might say that the farmers' best market is the domestic market.

That is true, but you have to have an export market to lift the burden of the surplus production off your domestic market. In other words, a 10-percent surplus may mean a 50-percent reduction in the domestic price, and as the chairman of the committee has pointed out, look at the record of how the national income of the farmers has gone up since we have had these trade agreements, and they cannot say that they have not been helped.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. BUCK. Let me illustrate with a fact what the gentleman has said. The prune growers of California, Oregon, and Washington, are in a most distressful situation at the present time. The reason is that their crop sales were based on export markets. Germany and Italy were the principal consumers of that commodity. As a result of the foreign situation, the blocking of exchange and various restrictive measures, that export market has been destroyed, and the surplus of prunes forced into our domestic market. That is not the result of any trade-agreement policy, but is entirely the result of the foreign situation, and if we do not recognize the necessity of our foreign market to other crops, the same thing would happen to them, would it not?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SHANLEY. The gentleman has given some thought to the necessity of tunneling not only under our own tariffs but the tariffs of retaliatory quotas in foreign nations, which has permitted our manufacturers to put branch manufactories in other countries. Does he believe there is any hope that there is some elimination possible under the reciprocal-trade treaties?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Shanley] has made a helpful suggestion. That is not included in my prepared remarks and I am glad to have it. There is no doubt about the fact that when we passed the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act in 1930 we drove industrial plants out of America to foreign countries, where, as the gentleman says, they could tunnel under the tariff and make the finished product of American goods for sale in foreign countries, but with foreign labor and not with American labor.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Is it not a fact that while the Smoot-Hawley bill was in course of preparation more than 1,000 economists throughout the country, Democrats and Republicans, without regard to politics, predicted the very thing would ensue that did ensue if that tariff bill were enacted into law?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have always put the figure at 100 who signed the protest to President Hoover, but I would just as soon put it at 1,000. All the economists there were predicted that.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It was between 1,000 and 1,100, according to my recollection.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield for a very brief question.

Mr. CROWTHER. Regarding the status of the farmer under present conditions, I understand from the records that the farmers' income in 1938 was $1,000,000,000 less than in 1937. We have spent $3,000,000,000 or more on various types of farm relief. Cotton, corn, wheat are today at new low prices.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I agreed to yield for a question and not for a speech.

Mr. CROWTHER. I apologize to the gentleman. He is making a splendid speech. I do not want to inject a sour note into it, especially after it had been so beautifully sweetened by the California prune juice. [Laughter.]

AGREEMENTS WITH CANADA AND UNITED KINGDOM

Mr. ROBERTSON. The recent negotiation of an agreement with the United Kingdom and the renewal of the previous agreement with Canada have been a source of particular criticism, but the critics of these agreements have expressed more fears than facts, and when they gave facts they have never given them all. And to me it is quite significant that the protected interests in Canada that have been adversely affected by the Canadian agreement are now engaged in presenting the identical arguments to the Canadian Parliament that are being presented to the American Congress, namely, that Canada has made a bad deal for Canadians.

In 1937 we exported to Canada $509,508,000 worth of merchandise and imported from Canada merchandise to the value of $398,539,000. The present trade between the United States and Canada outranks the trade between any other two countries in the world, and this is as it should be between two nations of such long and deep friendship. In all but 1 of the past 10 years we have been Canada's best customer and have supplied to Canada about three-fifths of her imports. Since the negotiation of a trade agreement with Canada our exports to Canada have increased at the rate of 42 percent above the preagreement period and well above the increase of our exports to the world as a whole. Our imports from Canada have increased in practically the same ratio. In other words, we have engaged in mutually beneficial trade.

Illustrative of how tariffs on certain goods restrict their movement in international trade is the fact that Canada's imports of American products on which duties were substantially reduced increased in 2 years from $120,000,000 to $215 .-000,000, an increase of 80 percent. And the same applied to our importation of Canadian goods, where the increase was 87 percent, as compared with an increase of only 34 percent on dutiable articles not specifically in the agreement and of 35 percent on duty-free goods.

There has been so much misrepresentation regarding the concessions on cattle and dairy products to Canada that I want to summarize exactly what was done in that agreement.

Cattle

The most important concessions to Canada in the livestock field are safeguarded by tariff quotas. The dominant item is live cattle weighing 700 pounds or more per head. Under the 1936 agreement the duty on such cattle was reduced from 3 to 2 cents per pound, subject to a quota of 156,000 head. Although, during 1936 and 1937, on account of the scarcity and high prices of meat animals in the United States, the quota on cattle was filled and some additional animals entered at the statutory rate, the imports in 1938 fell far below the quota. The new agreement provides for a rate of 11/2 cents per pound, and the quota has been increased to 225,000 head. The number entering at the reduced rate during any one quarter of the year, however, is limited to 60,000. This new feature will tend to prevent concentrated pressure of imports on the market. The new quota represents about 11/8 percent of the average annual slaughter of cattle, including calves, in the United States, thus assuring to the domestic industry nearly the whole market.

Another agreement item of importance is calves. In 1936 the duty was cut from  $2\frac{1}{2}$  to  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cents per pound on a quota of 52,000 head. Actual imports exceeded the quota in 1936 and 1937, the excess paying the full statutory duty. By the new agreement the same rate is continued, but the quota is raised to 100,000 head, a small fraction of domestic slaughter. At the same time the concession has been made more favorable to Canada by raising the weight limit from 175 to 200 pounds per head.

The 1936 agreement made a maximum reduction—to 11/2 cents per pound-on cows imported especially for dairly purposes. A quota of 20,000 head was fixed, but that figure has not been approached by actual imports. Consequently in renewing this concession the quota limitation has been dropped.

Dairy products

For the most part the concessions on dairy products in the new agreement are the same, or approximately the same, as those in the 1936 agreement. That agreement reduced the duty on cream from 56.6 to 35 cents per gallon, subject to a quota of 1,500,000 gallons, equal to about one-fourth of 1 percent of domestic consumption. Less than one-seventh of the quota has actually entered since. The duty has now been further reduced to 28.3 cents per gallon; the quota is unchanged. A new concession is made on whole milk, the rate being reduced from 61/2 to 31/4 cents per gallon on a quantity not to exceed 3,000,000 gallons, which is equal to less than 1 percent of the domestic production even in those regions where Canadian milk might compete. The imports for some years before 1930, when the duty was 21/2 cents per gallon, averaged about 4,500,000 gallons annually.

The 1936 agreement lowered the specific duty on Cheddar cheese in original loaves from 7 to 5 cents per pound and the ad valorem minimum rate from 35 to 25 percent. Imports increased to about 10,000,000 pounds in 1936, and they supplied about 2 percent of the total consumption in this country. The gain in domestic production in the same year, however, was greater in absolute quantity than the increase in imports. In 1937 and 1938 the imports were smaller than in 1936. The further reduction of the duty to 4 cents per pound in the new agreement has been extended to other nonprocessed Cheddar cheese, the trade in which is very small. The ad valorem minimum rate remains at 25 percent.

On January 19 a Member of this House predicted disastrous competition for domestic cream on Canadian imports under the new trade agreement.

In the first place, the reduced duty on cream in the latest Canadian agreement was from 35 to 28.3 cents per gallon, which applies to a maximum of 1,500,000 gallons or something like one-fourth of 1 percent of the domestic consumption. In the first agreement with Canada, when the duty was reduced from 56.6 to 35 cents per gallon, what happened? In 1936, the first full agreement year, 2.9 percent of the quota, or 44,000 gallons, entered; in 1937, 9.1 percent of the quota, or 137,000 gallons, entered; in 1938, 0.3 percent of the quota, or 5,100 gallons, entered.

A good friend and colleague has personally complained to me of the reduction in the duty on Canadian hay.

In the first agreement with Canada the United States reduced the duty on hay from $5 to $3 per ton. In the new agreement the rate was reduced to $2.50 per ton, which is the limit under the Trade Agreements Act. Canada reduced the duty on hay from $5 to $1.75 per ton. Due to the drought of 1936 there was a shortage of feedstuffs in the United States until the 1937 crops were harvested, and this accounts for the relatively large increase in imports of hay from Canada in 1937 over 1936. It might be noted, however, that the total imports of hay constitute an insignificant quantity, about two-tenths of 1 percent of the domestic production of tame hay, in 1937. Both imports and exports involve a little border trade along the international boundary. The imported hay, at the lower rates of duty, benefited farmers and dairymen at a time when their local supply was depleted.

For the first 11 months of 1938 we imported from all countries, but principally, of course, from Canada, 15,798 tons of hay, of the total value of $119,466, which was just about onehalf in tonnage what we imported in 1929 and less than onehalf in value. The American hay farmer was certainly not "sold down the river" in that agreement, as the exports of hav for 1938 were from three to four times as large as the imports.

Our exports to Great Britain, colonies excluded, amounted to $534,564,000 in 1937, and imports from Great Britain amounted to only $202,771,000, a balance of trade in our favor of some $330,000,000.

The agreement is particularly important because the United Kingdom is by far the principal market for American agricultural exports. Even in 1937, when, as a result of the drought of 1936, agricultural exports were much smaller than some years ago, United States exports of farm products to the United Kingdom were valued at $261,000,000 and constituted about one-third of the exports of agricultural products to all countries of the world.

Important concessions have been secured for American farm products in the United Kingdom market. The most important of these are the abolition of the United Kingdom duties on wheat, lard, canned grapefruit, and certain fruit juices; substantial reductions in the duties on rice, apples, pears, and certain canned fruits; an increase in the quantity of American hams permitted to enter under the quota system; and binding of duty-free entry of ham and certain other pork products; corn, other than flat white corn; and cotton.

Statistics of trade in the years immediately preceding this agreement cannot indicate fully the importance of the concessions obtained for American exports. In addition to the restrictive effect upon imports of American products of the trade barriers modified by this agreement, the scarcity of grains and meats in the United States in the last few years as a result of drought has been a factor of major importance in the reduction of American exports. The value of imports into the United Kingdom from the United States of all articles, agricultural and nonagricultural, on which concessions are obtained in the agreement-including both concessions which improve the tariff status and those which bind existing treatment against unfavorable change-was about $300,000,000 in 1936, the latest year for which detailed statistics of imports into the United Kingdom are available. Even under the above-mentioned conditions the value of total imports into the United Kingdom of American farm products on which concessions are obtained amounted in 1936 to more than $200,000,000.

Apples

While I do not have time to go into all the individual items in this summary of the agreement with Great Britain, I desire to comment briefly upon the importance of that country as a market for apples. The exports of apples from Virginia, as well as from other States, are very important. Exports of apples average between 10 and 15 percent of the commercial production. That 10 or 15 percent, if thrown back on the domestic market, would be disastrous to domestic prices. It would have far more than a 10- or 15-percent effect on prices. A 10- or 15-percent addition to the supply might even break prices by 50 percent. The percentage of exports of apples from Virginia greatly exceeds the national average, sometimes reaching a fourth of the domestic production of the State.

The United Kingdom has long been the most important foreign outlet for American fresh apples. The United Kingdom ordinarily takes about 40 percent of the United States exports. British takings of American apples were valued at $18,938,000 in 1929. Until the establishment of empire preference in 1932, in part a retaliation against our tariff policies, the United States had been the principal shipper of fresh apples to the United Kingdom, American apples accounting for about one-half of fresh apple imports from all sources.

American apples have been dutiable at 4s. 6d. per hundredweight since November 1932, while apples of Empire origin have remained duty-free. The British concession on apples reduces the duty by one-third to 3s. per hundredweight during the period August 16 to April 15, inclusive, when the bulk of the shipments from the United States of each marketing year are made to the United Kingdom. The reduced duty is equivalent to about 16 percent ad valorem, compared with over 24 percent for the previous rate. This concession should help the American apple export trade to regain a substantial portion of its share of the British market displaced through the former 4s. 6d. duty.

The agreement with the United Kingdom is not the only country in which important concessions have been obtained for apples and other fruits. As a matter of fact, every country with which we have negotiated trade agreements, with the exception of Nicaragua, have granted concessions of one kind or another on fresh fruit. Sixteen of the countries have granted concessions on fresh apples. These countries took approximately 28 percent of the exports of apples during 1933–34 previous to any trade agreements. During 1936–37, in spite of a short American crop, these countries took 42 percent of the exports of apples. Concessions on dried fruits have been obtained in 16 or 17 of the agreements, some concessions have been obtained on canned fruit in every one of the 19 agreements.

WAR MATERIALS

Those who attempt to belittle the importance of trade agreements in expanding our foreign trade have spoken in a sinister way of the exports of alleged war materials. My distinguished colleague from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] on February 10, 1938, showed that the export of alleged war materials in 1929 amounted to $944,000,000, or $168,000,000 more than they did in 1937. Of course, I cannot reach any fair basis of understanding with critics of the program who are attempting to classify our exports of agricultural products as war materials. They are, of course, used during the period of war, but likewise are normal peacetime products of commerce. Germany is supposed to be building up war munitions, yet our exports to Germany in the first 11 months of 1938 were about $13,000,000 less than in 1937. Italy is another nation that from current reports is preparing for possible hostilities. Our exports to Italy for a like period in 1938 were about $17,000,000 less than in 1937. But the real hue and cry about the exportation of war materials relates to Japan. In a comparable period in 1937 our exports to Japan amounted to $271,948,000 and in 1938 to $211,051,000, a decrease of $60,897,000, although, as I have previously pointed out, our total exports in 1938 were over $3,000,000,000 and our favorable balance over $1,000,000,000.

A COMPARISON OF METHODS

Another favorite criticism of the trade-agreement program is the alleged star-chamber proceedings. Such a charge does not come with good grace from those who rammed the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill down the throats of the Democratic Members of the House under the most drastic gag rule ever known to that body. Not even a Woodrow Wilson, who in 1912 referred to those who sat down behind closed doors to play providence to certain vested interests, could visualize a Grundy behind closed doors framing the outrageous provisions of the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill.

The American Tariff League, which is a consistent opponent of trade agreements, recently asserted:

While we thoroughly disagree with some of the economic reasoning offered in justification of certain cuts in duty made in other trade agreements, we have no hesitancy in saying we know it to be true that certain types of economic presentation of interested parties have been considered and have contributed materially to the determination as to what should be done in connection with various individual products which have been under consideration.

In the negotiation of a trade agreement, the public is invited or given an opportunity to formally participate on two separate occasions. There is no limitation on the informal presentation of any pertinent material. Every opportunity is given each interested person to be fully heard, and all facts submitted to the State Department are given full and careful consideration before an agreement is negotiated. And all of these facts are likewise laid before every participating department and its advice sought before an agreement is negotiated. Compare that procedure, if you please, with the writing of the infamous Hawley-Smoot tariff bill, when the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee spent 2 months and 10 days behind closed doors deciding what to put in the bill, while the 10 Democratic members of the committee remained completely ignorant of what was going on.

The bill thus prepared was then reported, and under a rule prohibiting any amendment to be offered except a committee amendment, the House was given 4 days for consideration of the bill. Of the 10,681 lines in the Hawley-Smoot bill, only 82 were considered in the House. Of the 727 paragraphs included in the first and second sections of the bill, only 6 of them were read and considered. Of the 183 sections contained in the bill, only a small fraction of one of the sections was read and considered. There were only 4 pages of the 434 pages of the bill given any consideration. Of this procedure, Ragon, of Arkansas, a former member of the Ways and Means Committee, said:

As a fitting climax to this legislative horseplay which characterized the conduct of this bill through its consideration by the House, the Clerk read, as a part of the meager consideration of this bill, paragraph 2 * * *.

A paragraph dealing with the chemical schedule.

As between a tariff bill drafted in this manner and a trade agreement drafted in accordance with the present procedure of the State Department, only those who seek special privileges in return for special party services could prefer the Hawley-Smoot procedure.

At the outset of these remarks I referred to the importance of returning men to private employment as a safeguard against deficit financing that would ultimately lead to currency inflation. I have presented statistics showing the definite relation between foreign trade and domestic employment. I have presented statistics to show that the program has been beneficial to agriculture as well as to industry. I have endeavored to show that in the negotiation of trade agreements every precaution is taken to safeguard domestic interests. I have pointed out the utter futility of hoping for any break-down of tariff barriers by congressional action. I have cited the figures showing the tremendous increase of our foreign trade under the reciprocal trade agreement program. But I would not be willing to end the discussion of this important subject without a reference to the equally important subject of world peace. Mr. Speaker, I have convinced myself, if I have not convinced any other Member of this honorable body, that a restoration of our foreign trade will help us financially and help to save the form of government we all love. But regardless of any vote I may have cast in this body that indicated that in the approach to some of our social and economic problems I was more conservative than some of my colleagues, I have never placed material values above human values. And to me the deepest and most significant appeal of Mr. Hull's reciprocal-trade policy is its potential contribution to world peace and the saving of human lives. Human nature being what it is, we must frankly admit that those nations that lack certain essential raw products are going to get them if they can; if not by peaceful methods, then by force. And I firmly believe that a resort to the club to get what could and should be acquired by mutually beneficial trade will be the dawning for our modern civilization of a new cave-man age.

The contribution of trade agreements to the promotion of world peace has nowhere been better summarized than in the letter of September 2, 1938, from Secretary of State Cordell Hull to the Honorable John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, wherein Mr. Hull said:

the Republican National Committee, wherein Mr. Hull said:

That economic armaments result in a lowering of living standards throughout the entire world; foment internal strife; and offer constant temptation to use force, or threat of force, as a means of obtaining from other nations what could have been procured through the normal processes of trade.

That a people driven to desperation by want and misery is a constant threat of disorder and chaos, both internal and external.

That, to the extent that we can make it easier for ourselves and everyone else to live, we diminish the pressure on any country to seek economic betterment through war.

That the great fundamental approach to the problem of peace is the ordering of the economic life of the civilized world in a manner which will enable the masses of the people to work and to live in reasonable comfort.

That nations cannot produce on a level to sustain their popula-

That nations cannot produce on a level to sustain their populations in comfort and well-being unless there are reasonable opportunities to trade one with another.

That this cannot happen in a world of extreme economic bar-riers and military hostility. For these self-evident reasons the trade-agreements program is a great cornerstone for the edifice of peace.

And on that stone, Mr. Speaker, I raise my Ebenezer. Every woman who has gone down into the valley of the shadow of death that a new life may be brought into being, who has seen the blue of the skies mirrored in innocent eyes, who has felt chubby fingers entwined about the tendrils of her heart has a right to hope, has a right to demand that her Government will do all in its power to prevent her son from being consumed as cannon fodder.

And if there be any who wish to make of that program a political issue in 1940, I will accept the challenge. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and other special orders, if any, I may address the House for 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Cooper of Tennessee). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House heretofore entered the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hoffman] is entitled to recognition for 20 minutes. [After a pause.] The gentleman does not seem to be present.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. Mansfield (at the request of Mr. DeRouen), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. Hennings (at the request of Mr. Romjue) for 10 days on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 2762. An act to consolidate and codify the internal revenue laws of the United States; and

H. J. Res. 83. Joint resolution making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 2762. An act to consolidate and codify the internal revenue laws of the United States; and

H. J. Res. 83. Joint resolution making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with its previous order, adjourned until Monday, February 6, 1939, at 12 o'clock

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Public hearings will continue Saturday, February 4, 1939, at 10 a. m., on social-security legislation in the Ways and Means Committee room in the New House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a. m. Tuesday, February 7, 1939. Business to be considered: Continuation of hearing on H. R. 2531—transportation bill. Mr. R. V. Fletcher, of the American Association of Railroads, will be the witness.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, February 7, 1939, at 10:30 a.m., for the purpose of continuing the consideration of H. R. 2880, "To authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes," carrying out partially the recommendations of the Hepburn report.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization in room 446, House Office Building, Wednesday, February 8, 1939, at 10: 30 a.m., for the public consideration of H. J. Res. 90 and H. R. 2200.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10:30 a. m. Tuesday, February 7, 1939, on the bills listed below:

H. R. 785, Draft Convention No. 53, officers' competency (Bland); H. R. 947 (Seger), H. R. 950 (Kennedy), H. R. 1639 (Brewster), H. R. 1641 (Bates of Massachusetts), H. R. 1799 (Maloney), H. R. 1805 (Hall), H. R. 2534 (Culkin), H. R. 2641 (Dimond), H. R. 3210 (Cannon of Florida), H. R. 3216 (Schaffer of Wisconsin), H. R. 3228 (McCormack), H. J. Res. 118 (Shanley).

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m. Tuesday, February 21, 1939, on the bill (H. R. 3576) to make effective the provisions of the Officers' Competency Certificates Convention, 1936.

It is contemplated that the hearing on Tuesday, February 7, 1939, on H. R. 785 and related bills will deal with the exemption of vessels of less than 200 gross tons from the provisions of the treaty. The hearing on Tuesday, February 21, on H. R. 3576 will deal particularly with legislation necessary to make effective the provisions of the treaty and problems arising in connection with the provisions of the treaty.

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold public hearings in room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., at 10 a. m., on the bills and dates listed below:

Tuesday, March 14, 1939:

H. R. 180, H. R. 202, construction of a Nicaraguan Canal; H. R. 201, additional facilities for Panama Canal; H. R. 2667, construction of a Mexican canal.

Tuesday, March 21, 1939:

H. R. 137, H. R. 980, H. R. 1674, relating to annuities for Panama Canal construction force.

Thursday, March 23, 1939:

H. R. 139, H. R. 141, H. R. 142, H. R. 1819, miscellaneous Panama Canal bills.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows: 382. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for printing and binding. Bureau of the Budget, in substitution of ing and binding, Bureau of the Budget, in substitution of the estimate appearing under this head on page 648 of the 1940 Budget (H. Doc. No. 149); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

383. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration Department of the Interior, for the fiscal year 1939, in the amount of $3,000,000 (H. Doc. No. 148); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

384. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1940 in the amount of $334,000 (H. Doc. No. 147); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

385. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill to amend section 210 of the Communications Act of 1934, approved June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1073; 47 U. S. C. 210), so as to permit communication utilities to contribute free services to the national defense; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

386. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting reports on the sale of equipment acquired during the World War; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SENATE

Monday, February 6, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. Z@Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who hast made in one pure timeless thought all things at once, the last things with the first and the first life with the last: We bow before Thy inscrutable power, beseeching Thee to unfold the glimmering miracles of life's loveliness one by one, each at its destined moment; for Thy ways with us are as manifold as the number of the souls of men. We pray, then, for grace to respond with heart and mind and will to the call of duty in this high and holy service of our country; reveal to us the wisdom taught of love to understand those human needs for which the sacrament of true and lasting sympathy alone is adequate; and, that what we do here day by day may be pleasing unto Thee, grant us the sense of Thy friendship and nearness, a hand in ours, a companion on the weary way, and a light within our heart. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. Barkley, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, February 2, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

House Joint Memorial 5

Whereas the Civil Aeronautics Authority of the United States has conducted an investigation in southwest Colorado relative to has conducted an investigation in southwest Colorado relative to the advisability of establishing a Federal airport for the use of the Army and Navy of the United States and for other purposes; and Whereas said Civil Aeronautics Authority, through its supervisory engineer, has recommended that the Congress of the United States be requested to appropriate $158,000 for the establishment of such airport at or near the city of Cortez, Colo.; and Whereas the establishment of such airport at Cortez, Colo., would be of inestimable value to the State of Colorado: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the thirty-second general assembly (the senate concurring herein), That the Congress of the United States be strongly urged to include in its appropriations for enlarging the facilities of the air forces of the country an appropriation sufficient to provide for the establishment of a Federal airport at or near Cortez, in the State of Colorado; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Colorado in the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

House Resolution 7

Resolution petitioning the Congress of the United States to make the social-security measure contained in H. R. 7260 of the Seventy-fourth Congress strictly a Federal project and under-taking, independent of and free from State control or State responsibility

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Seventeenth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, That—
Whereas the Seventy-fourth Congress of the United States of America, H. R. 7260, Public, No. 271, created what is commonly termed social-security measure for the welfare and benefit of the citizens of the various States; and

Whereas the Federal Government, by said action, attempted to set up State boards to administer said social-security measures, with State boards under Federal supervision and control, and that said joint control, during its operation in this State, has been such as to create great confusion, excessive cost, lack of efficiency, and a dual relationship which has been to the detriment of the old people of this State; and

Whereas, to correct and remedy this situation, it is the opinion of this house that such a program of social security could best be carried out under the direct and sole supervision and control of the Federal Government and free the State from any necessity of having

Federal Government and free the State from any necessity of having to participate in any way in the program, and that such a change would make said program more stable, efficient, and place it in the hands of the unit of government best able to provide for such a far-reaching program: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Seventeenth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, That the Congress of the United States be immediately advised of the attitude of this house, that the provision of H. R. 7260, Public, No. 271, of the Seventy-fourth Congress of the United States be made strictly a Federal project; that all funds necessary to administer it be raised by the Federal Government, and the administration of the same be controlled strictly by agencies of the Federal Government, for the reason that same would be more efficient, more practical, and remove the causes of delay and differences which have made the administration of this project in Oklahoma very unpopular; and that the clerk of this house be instructed to mail a certified copy of this resolution to the Speaker of the House and President of the Senate of the United States, Washington, D. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Vermont, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas day by day thousands of Chinese women and children are being mercilessly killed and maimed by bombs and machine guns from the air by the Japanese Army of aggression; and Whereas Japan purchases over 50 percent of her war materials and commodities of war from United States manufacturers: Therefore, in the interest of humanity and international peace, it is hereby

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That every possible pressure be brought to bear, directly and indirectly, by every governmental agency to prohibit at once the sale and ship-ment of such above-mentioned war materials to Japan, which are being used by her in the ruthless slaughter of thousands of inno-cent Chinese civilians; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent by the secretary of the State of Vermont to the President of the United States, the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States, and to each member of the Vermont delegation in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate joint resolution relative to exemption from taxation of bonds issued by governmental agencies and memorializing the President and Congress of the United States to take immediate steps for the termination of the exemption of such securities from taxation

Whereas the exemption from taxation of bonds issued by the Federal, State, and local governments has progressed to such a point that there are now outstanding tax-exempt securities of this character amounting to the aggregate par value of approximately $45,000,000,000 in 1937 and has now reached a total of approximately $72,000,000,000; and

Whereas such securities are owned and held by a very small percentage of the population of the country and there results a great and most unjust disproportion in the bearing of the cost of government as between the owners and holders of various types and classes of property; and

Whereas it is a fundamental principle of government that one group or class should not be favored as are the owners of these tax-exempt securities, and all persons enjoying the order and protection which government affords should share fairly equally and equitably in bearing the cost of government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the legislature of this State hereby memorialize the President and Congress of the United States to consider and enact such legislation and to propose such amendment or amendments. such legislation and to propose such amendment or amendments to the Constitution of the United States as may be found suitable and appropriate effectively to prevent the further exemption from taxation of any and all bonds and other evidences of indebtedness issued by the Federal, State, and local governments, to the fullest extent that the President and the Congress may have power so to do, and that the Members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives from California are hereby urged and requested to use all honorable means in furtherance of the consideration and enactment of such legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forthwith transmitted to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Members of the House and Senate from the State of California.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Senate joint resolution relative to memorializing Congress to amend the California Indian Jurisdictional Act of 1928

Whereas it has come to the attention of this legislature that but half of the tribes and nations of Indians within this State in 1851 and 1852 had signed the 18 treaties forming the basis of the Indian Jurisdictional Act of 1928; and

Whereas nontreaty Indians are at the present time barred from bringing actions in the Court of Claims against the Federal Government on account of the failure of the Government to ratify and keep certain treaties with Indian tribes of California in 1851 and 1852; and

Whereas this legislature is informed and believes that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have approved legislation proposed for submission to the Congress of the United States, which legislation contains the nontreaty provisions; and

Whereas new hope and confidence in our fellow men by the In-dians of California and the Nation will be encouraged: Now, there-

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Congress of the United States be most respectfully urged to forthwith amend the California Indian Jurisdictional Act of 1928 to provide for nontreaty Indians; and be it further Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of the State of California In Congress he and are bersely urged to put for their proposed amendments; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be respectfully transmitted to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each of the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in Congress, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Commissioner of Indian

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Senate joint resolution relative to memorializing the Congress of the United States to refuse enactment of legislation which would becloud the sovereign rights of the State of California in its submerged lands

Whereas upon the formation of the United States of America, Whereas upon the formation of the United States of America, the States, as independent sovereignties, reserved to themselves all the right, title, and interest in and to the submerged lands and tidelands bordering upon their respective territories and, the right, title, and interest upon their respective territories and, with the expenditure of public funds, have devoted such lands to harbor developments and other State purposes, or through grants or arrangements made with their municipalities and public agencies and with their citizens have devoted said lands to other public and private uses and such sovereign rights of the States agencies and with their citizens have devoted said lands to other public and private uses, and such sovereign rights of the States have never heretofore been questioned; and

Whereas legislation has been introduced in the Congress of the United States, particularly Senate Joint Resolution No. 24, introduced by the Honorable United States Senator Gerald P. Nye wherein it is asserted that the Federal Government possesses the title to or holds an interest in submerged lands and tidelands bordering upon the various States of the Union, and it is proposed to direct the Attorney General of the United States to institute legal action in the courts to litigate such asserted title or interests; and

Whereas any such litigation will becloud the rights and title of the respective States, prejudice their progress in developing such lands for State and local uses, both public and private, endanger existing investments and impair future financing of local projects on such lands, and the enactment of such legislation is, in the opinion of this legislature, undesirable and contrary to the public interests: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved in the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully urges and petitions the Congress of the United States to refuse enactment of either Senate Joint Resolution No. 24 or any other bill or resolution which may similarly seek to establish the asserted claim of the Federal Government to any title or interest in serted claim of the Federal Government to any title or interest in such submerged lands or tidelands of the State of California, other than such lands which may have been heretofore expressly granted it by this State or under its authority; and be it further Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Vice President, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Arkansas favoring the enactment of amendatory legislation removing from the neutrality law and the socalled Johnson Act such provisions as may tend to aid belligerent totalitarian nations, so that the United States may be relieved of restrictions in conflict with the interests of world peace, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(See concurrent resolution printed in full when presented today by Mrs. Caraway.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate petitions of members of the Kansas Farmers' Liberty League and sundry citizens, all of Washington County, Kans., praying for the repeal of the Agricultural Act of 1938, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram, dated February 2, 1939, Hominy, Okla., from Joe Shun Kah Mo Lah, chairman, and other Osage Indians, stating, "Please use your influence to defeat passage of Resolution 31, written by someone at Office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, November 23, 1938. The full-blood Osage Indians do not want this passed. Will send petition in near future," which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions of several trainservice brotherhoods in the State of Missouri, protesting against the enactment of legislation to regulate the mileage of train-service employees, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate petitions, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of Puerto Rico, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. Brown] and myself, I present numerous petitions signed by 125,000 citizens of Michigan. The originals are filed at the Secretary's desk. They are petitions in behalf of continuing neutrality, with particular reference to the Spanish embargo. I ask that the text of one of the petitions be printed in the RECORD and that they all be appropriately

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the text of one of the petitions will be printed in the RECORD.

The text of one of the petitions above referred to is as fol-

To the Congress of the United States:

We the undersigned respectfully petition the Congress, for as long as we shall adhere to the general policy of neutrality as enunciated in the act of August 31, 1935, to retain on our statute books the further and corollary principle enunciated in the act of May 1, 1937, extending the original act to include civil as well as international conflicts

Mr. CONNALLY presented a memorial of members of the Parent-Teacher Association of Pampa Junior High School, of Pampa, Tex., remonstrating against the enactment of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 24) relative to the establishment of title of the United States to certain submerged lands containing petroleum deposits, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. TYDINGS presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, praying that the United States adhere to the general policy of neutrality as enunciated in existing law and extend the law so as to include civil as well as international conflicts, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TAFT presented petitions, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of the State of Ohio, praying that the United States adhere to the general policy of neutrality as enunciated in existing law and extend the law so as to include civil as well as international conflicts, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MALONEY presented petitions of Santa Maria Circle, No. 27, National Daughters of Isabella, of Waterbury; Judge Frederick J. Whelan and 15 other citizens of Greenwich; and about 100 other citizens, all in the State of Connecticut. praying that the United States adhere to the general policy of neutrality as enunciated in existing law and extend the law so as to include civil as well as international conflicts, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations

Mr. REED presented a petition signed by 131 citizens of Atchison, Kans., praying for the enactment of the so-called Patman bill, imposing taxes on chain stores, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of 34 citizens of Cottonwood, 58 citizens of Butler and Osborne Counties, 38 citizens of Downs, and 54 citizens of Medicine Lodge, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the shipment of arms, munitions, and supplies to Japan to be used in their Chinese operations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Alberta Hampton, assistant secretary, Local G-102. Gregg County, Glade Water, Tex., praying for the appropriation of $875,000,000 for the continuation of W. P. A. projects for the balance of the current fiscal year, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Whereas the United States has for a long number of years been divided into zones for the purpose of fixing freight rates, with said freight-rate structure under the direct supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and

Whereas the freight rates under the zoning system are much higher in certain sections of the Nation than in other sections; and
Whereas the people of Texas and the Southwest are paying from 60 to 85 percent more on their freight than are the people in the

60 to 85 percent more on their freight than are the people in the East and central Eastern States; and
Whereas this discrimination is detrimental to the farmer, the laborer, the businessman, and the manufacturer of our section of the Nation and does not give them equal opportunity to benefit in agriculture, commerce, or our economic system in general; and
Whereas if we are to have industrialization and to promote factories in Texas and the Southwest and to give the farmer, the laborer, and the businessman an even break, it is necessary that this discrimination of freight rates be abolished and a fair and this discrimination of freight rates be abolished and a fair and equitable system inaugurated: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives, That we hereby ask the United States Congress to take such steps as might be necessary to obtain from the Interstate Commerce Commission the cooperation and rulings necessary to abolish this discrimination in freight rates and to inaugurate a fair, just, and equitable system; and be it Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Members of the United States Congress from Texas.

Mrs. CARAWAY presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

House Joint Memorial 4

Whereas war clouds now hang over Europe, threatening to draw the great powers of the world into another international conflict, and

Whereas our Nation eventually would be drawn into such a war. and

Whereas it is the consensus of the membership of the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas that such conflict can be averted by proper action of the United States of America, and Whereas it is the further belief of the membership of the Arkan-

Whereas it is the further belief of the membership of the Arkansas General Assembly that the Neutrality Act and the Johnson Act, the first prohibiting sale of materials of war to any warring nation and the second prohibiting loans by the United States to any nation now in default in its obligations to the United States of America, while sound in principle at the time of their adoption by the Congress of the United States, are standing today as a bulwark of protection to those belligerent totalitarian nations whose actions in recent months tend to threaten the peace of the entire world: Now, therefore world: Now, therefore

The House of Representatives of the Arkansas General Assembly (the senate concurring) Herewith memorializes the Congress of the United States to adopt and the President to approve such amendatory legislation as will remove those features of the Neutrality Act and the Johnson Act which tend to aid said belligerent totalitarian nations in order that the Government of the United States will be relieved of all restrictions in conflict with the interests of world

The chief clerk of the house shall prepare copies of this memorial and shall send same to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the National Congress, and copies to each Senator and Representative in Congress from Arkansas.

Mr. GEORGE presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Whereas all civilization began with and will end with the plow;

whereas when agriculture prospers, the Nation prospers and plenty and peace fuel the land; and Whereas when agriculture is impoverished, despair, discontent, and want stalk the country; and Whereas cotton is still king and our Southern States are dependent upon a market for their cotton crop as the only means by which they can materially prosper; and

Whereas coconut oil, peanuts, cottonseed, and other foreign oils and fats are being imported into this country to directly compete with cottonseed oil to the detriment of our southern farmers;

Whereas the importation of jute into this country is invited, sponsored, and condoned by certain interests who do not have the welfare of the farmers and American agriculture at heart; and said jute directly competes with cotton in our domestic markets; and

Whereas when the southern farmer prospers in the economic flow, his prosperity moves to the money markets of the East, and the East in turn receives prosperity from the hands of the south-ern farmers, and the prosperity of the East and South, in turn, causes the other sections of this great country to prosper: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the United States Congress be memorialized to prohibit the importation of coconut oil, peanuts, cottonseed, and other for-eign oils and fats into this country, and further, that the importation of jute be curtailed and prohibited; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to each member of the Georgia congressional delegation in the Congress, and that they be urged to launch a movement in the Congress to bring about the prohibitions herein suggested.

Mr. GEORGE also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Whereas title to Black-beard Island, off the coast of Georgia, is now lodged in the Government of the United States of America;

Whereas the said Black-beard Island, comprising approximately 1,500 acres, was acquired by the United States in 1799 for the purpose of using the timber thereon for building wooden ships; and Whereas it has not been used by the Federal Government for years for any practical purposes and today is of no value, good, or service to the United States or any citizen thereof in its present condition; and

Whereas the said Black-beard Island consists mainly of five sand beaches approximately 7 miles in length which would afford the State of Georgia a stretch of the very best beaches on the South Atlantic seaboard; and

Whereas the said Black-beard Island could be developed into a splendid and attractive recreational and vacational spot for the people of our State by our State government; and Whereas by acquisition of this land by the State there would accrue to the State government considerable money each year from the sale and rentals of property on this island: Therefore be it Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring).

That the Governor be requested to immediately importune the Government of the United States to cede and deed the said Blackbeard Island back to the State of Georgia; and also that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each Member of the Senate and House from Georgia in our National Assembly.

CONSIDERATION OF BILLS ON THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Routine morning business having been concluded, the clerk will proceed to call the calendar.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States on claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico, was announced as first in order.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LULU M. PEIPER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 117) for the relief of Lulu M. Peiper, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lulu M. Peiper, of Wallingford, Conn., the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the death of her son, Raymond E. Monson, late apprentice seaman, United States Navy, who was killed in the performance of his duties at Newport, R. I., on May 14, 1928: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person yielating contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERSTATE OPERATION OF MOTOR VEHICLES

The bill (S. 25) prohibiting the operation of motor vehicles in interstate commerce by unlicensed operators was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler], who reported the bill, is in the Chamber. I suggest to him that an explanation has been requested of Senate bill 25.

Mr. WHEELER. Let the bill go over for the time being. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. TRUMAN subsequently said: Mr. President, I was absent from the Chamber a moment ago when Senate bill 25 was reached on the calendar and was passed over at the request of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary]. I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill in order that I may make an explanation of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to returning to the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is that the bill to which I objected a few moments ago?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. TRUMAN. It is the drivers' license bill.

Mr. McNARY. I asked that the bill go over for want of an explanation; but if the Senator from Missouri desires to explain it, I shall be very glad to listen to his explanation.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, the bill merely sets out certain requirements which drivers must meet before licenses may be issued to them in their various States; that is, certain requirements with which they must comply before they may cross a State line in driving an automobile from State to State.

There are now 11 States in the Union which have strict requirements for drivers' licenses. There are 22 States in the Union which have requirements that are standard under the requirements of the bill. The bill in no way infringes States' rights. It merely requires that a driver have a State license. federally recognized, which complies with certain requirements.

It has been stated by various statistical reporting agencies that out of 40,000 fatal automobile accidents last year, 2 out of every 3 were cases in which the driver did not know what he was doing at the time the accident happened. If strict drivers' license requirements were now in effect, it is my opinion that more than 33 1/3 percent of the deaths in the United States from automobile accidents would be prevented.

This bill will not go into effect for 4 years, and will give all the States a chance to enact the required legislation. A bill in similar terms passed the Senate last year by unanimous

Mr. McNARY. In view of that explanation, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person, except those hereinafter expressly exempted, shall operate any motor vehicle in interstate commerce or foreign commerce unless such person has in his immediate possession a valid license, issued under the laws of a State conforming to the requirements set forth in section 2, permitting him to operate such vehicle in the State in which the license was issued: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to authorize a person to drive or to operate a vehicle engaged in the transportation of persons and property in interstate or foreign commerce in violation of such regulations as the Interstate Commerce Commission may from time to time issue.

SEC. 2. No license shall be held to permit the operation of a motor vehicle in interstate commerce under the first section of this act unless the law of the State in which the license was issued provides—

(a) That no license permitting the operation of a motor vehicle shall be issued except to persons passing an examination which includes a test of the applicant's eyesight (with or without spectacles), his ability to read and understand highway signs regulating, warning, and directing traffic, and an actual demonstration of ability to exercise ordinary and reasonable control in the operation of a motor vehicle. of a motor vehicle.

(b) That such license must be renewed at least once in each 3-year period.(c) That it shall be unlawful for any person to (1) display or have in his possession any canceled, revoked, suspended, fictitious, or fraudulently altered license, or (2) to lend his license to any other person or knowingly permit the use thereof by another.

(d) That no such license shall be issued to a person who is not

16 or more years of age.(e) That such license shall contain a full and complete description of the person to whom it was issued.

(f) That such license may be revoked or suspended by the proper authorities.

SEC. 3. Any person operating a motor vehicle in interstate commerce shall display his license upon the demand of any law enforcement officer, but no person shall be convicted for a failure to so display his license if he produces in court a license issued to him and valid at the time of such alleged failure.

SEC. 4. Any person who violates any provision of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $300.

SEC. 5. (a) As used in this act—

(1) The term "license" means a license or operator's permit for the operation of motor vehicles.

(2) The term "State" means any of the several States or the District of Columbia.
(3) The term "interstate commerce" means transportation (in-"State" means any of the several States or the

(3) The term "interstate commerce" means transportation (including the propulsion of a motor vehicle under its own power) from a point in one State to a destination in another State or between points in the same State but through another State; and the term "foreign commerce" means transportation (including the propulsion of a motor vehicle under its own power) from a point in the United States to a point in a foreign country, or between points in the United States and through any foreign country. The operation of a motor vehicle, in any State, on which there are registration or license plates issued by another State shall create a presumption that such vehicle is being operated in interstate or foreign commerce, but such presumption shall not be conclusive.

(b) The provisions of this act shall not apply to any person

(b) The provisions of this act shall not apply to any person while operating a motor vehicle in the service of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States.

SEC. 6. This act shall take effect 4 years after the date of its enactment.

PASSAMAQUODDY BAY TIDAL POWER PROJECT

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 57) authorizing the Secretary of War to cause a completion of surveys, test borings, and foundation investigations to be made to determine the advisability and cost of putting in a small experimental plant for development of tidal power in the waters in and about Passamaquoddy Bay, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such examinations, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a completion of surveys, test borings, and foundation investigations to be made to determine the advisability and cost of putting in a small experimental plant for the development of tidal power in the waters in and about Passamaquoddy Bay, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or here-after made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors, and that the Secretary shall report to the Senate as soon as possible the results of said surveys, borings, and investi-gations and his recommendations as to the putting in of such experimental plant.

APPORTIONMENT OF UNPLANTED COTTON ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS

The bill (S. 660) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, to provide for the reapportionment of cotton acreage allotments not planted by farmers entitled thereto was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, this is the same amendment which passed the House and Senate last year to unfreeze certain allotments for cotton or wheat, and turn them back and have them reallotted to other farmers.

For instance, a farmer is allotted 100 acres of cotton. He does not want to plant more than 50 acres, and he would like to turn back the other 50 acres so that some other farmer who wants it may be allotted that 50 acres. This bill chiefly affects Oklahoma. Last year, as a result of a similar amendment, 235,000 acres of frozen allotments were unfrozen in Oklahoma, about 100,000 acres in Texas, and about 50,000 acres in Arkansas. The bill affects principally areas where wheat meets cotton, so to speak. There was no objection at all to similar legislation last year, and this bill simply extends the date of the legislation then enacted, making it a part of the act.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, to whom are the defrozen acres released? That is, are they released to the county allotment committee, or back to the State?

Mr. LEE. They are released back to the State. However, last year the Senator from Arkansas offered an amendment. which was accepted, giving preference to the counties; and that, of course, is still the law, and would be under this

Mr. MILLER. That is what I had in mind. In other words, this bill makes no change in the bill which we passed last year?

Mr. LEE. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, how many acres are affected by the unfreezing process which the Senator has mentioned?

Mr. LEE. Last year, 235,000 acres were affected in Oklahoma, 100,000 acres in Texas, and 50,000 acres in Arkansas. Mr. McNARY. Does the bill affect only three States?

Mr. LEE. I understand that it affects some of the other States, but to what extent I am not informed. Those were the ones chiefly affected.

Mr. McNARY. While these acres were frozen, did they receive any benefit payments from the Government? Did they receive any benefit payments under the program of 1938?

Mr. LEE. This was the law in 1938. This amendment simply extends the date of that law, and only those receive benefits who have allotments. Our State was entitled to some 300,000 acres of allotments which, without the amendment, we could not get.

Mr. McNARY. But those acres were idle and not used for productive purposes in 1938. Is not that true?

Mr. LEE. They would have been except for the amend-

Mr. McNARY. I understand that fully. What I desire to know is, and directly, whether they received any benefit payments from the Government while the lands were idle.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the lands were not idle. This bill pertains only to States in which the farmers have an option. My State is on the border. My State can raise cotton and wheat on the same farm. My State is allotted a certain number of acres to plant in cotton. If some farmer entitled, say, to 100 acres of cotton should not see fit to raise cotton and should want to raise wheat, under the old law he could not change, and no one else could have that allocation of land.

So last year, when we found the error, Congress amended the law for 1 year, so that there was no vacant land in my State last year. Unless we now again amend the law and make it permanent legislation, when our farmers receive an allocation of land for cotton, if they do not want to use it, the acreage is frozen; no one else may use it. This bill seeks to make the status of that land such that the State authorities may give my State the benefit of the full acreage allocated to my State. Otherwise, we shall be denied the use of several hundred thousand acres of land that we might plant to cotton.

Mr. McNARY. Will the bill have the effect of contracting the cotton acreage and expanding the wheat acreage?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; it will have no effect at

Mr. McNARY. Apparently it will.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. My State has a certain number of acres of cotton land. One farmer does not see fit to raise cotton. Under the present law, no one else may use that acreage; but under the amendment the farmer may release the land if he does not want to use it, and the State authorities may allot it to some other farmer in my State; so the amendment does not increase the total acreage of cotton in my State.

Mr. McNARY. But would not the enactment of the bill have the effect of expanding the wheat acreage?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Not more so than the present law. Of course, the farmer has the option of raising what he pleases. He must receive an allotment of wheat acreage before he may raise wheat.

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bill simply makes the law so liberal and so elastic that the State authorities may give my State its full quota of cotton land and its full quota of wheat land, so that my State may have the benefit of all the law allows. Otherwise, we shall not have that benefit.

Mr. McNARY. How many States are affected by the bill? Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In the main, the border States, the States that can raise both wheat and cotton.

Mr. McNARY. What is the total acreage that it is desired to unfreeze?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. About 235,000 acres in Oklahoma.

Mr. McNARY. But what is the total of the border States? Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I cannot answer as to the other States, but the acreage is not so large. I think my State has the largest amount.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I really did not know this bill was on the calendar until it was called. I did not know it was before the Agricultural Committee of the Senate. I do not want to delay and I never do unnecessarily delay any legislation; but I ask that the bill go over today, so that I may look into it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. McNARY subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Lee] that when the calendar was called I objected to the present consideration of Senate bill 660. After reading the bill I find that the same principle that obtained in 1938 will obtain in 1939 and hereafter under the law. So I withdraw my objection.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (h) of section 344 of the Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (a) of section 344 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out the words "for the crop year 1938" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "for any crop year"; and by striking out the words "for 1938" where they appear in the first proviso of such subsection.

JOHN R. HOLT

The bill (S. 584) for the relief of John R. Holt was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John R. Holt, major, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, the sum of $1,507.26, or so much thereof as shall have been collected from him prior to the passage of this act, in full and final settlement of all claims whatsoever against the United States for a stoppage in his pay on account of the embezzlement of public funds by a civilian employee of the office of the quartermaster, Fort Jay, N. Y., from July 1, 1925, to February 28, 1931, while Major Holt was on duty as property and salvage officer at Fort Jay, N. Y.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

NOLA D. COCKE

NOLA D. COCKE

The bill (S. 1076) for the relief of the widow of the late William J. Cocke was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be is enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Nola Dilworth Cocke, widow of the late William J. Cocke, of North Carolina, the sum of widow of the late William J. Cocke, of North Carolina, the sum of $9,116.88, in full settlement of all claims against the Government for losses growing out of contracts with the War Department; one dated July 1, 1918, for the purchase of garbage from Camp Greene, eituated at or near the city of Charlotte, N. C.; and the other dated September 3, 1918, for Camp Wadsworth, situated at or near the city of Spartanburg, S. #### PHERNE MILLER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 279) for the relief of Pherne Miller, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment at the end of the bill to add a proviso so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Pherne Miller, of Washington, D. C., the sum of $200 in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for compensation for services performed by her in making drawings for the United States George Washington Bicenmaking drawings for the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission during the year 1931: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET ROSE UNCAPHER AND OTHERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 529) for the relief of Margaret Rose Uncapher, Milton E. Uncapher, Jr., and Andrew G. Uncapher, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the figures "$901.60," to strike out "together with interest thereon at the rate of 6 percent per annum from July 14, 1936, to date of payment," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of appropriation for "Emergency construction of public buildings, act of August 12, 1935," to Margaret Rose Uncapher, Milton E. Uncapher, Jr., and Andrew G. Uncapher, of Vandergrift, Pa., the sum of $901.60, as payment in full satisfaction of the amount of balance of just compensation claimed to be due them on account of the taking of their lands by the United States through condemnation proceedings for a post-office site at Vandergrift, Pa.: Provided, That he part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 perno part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 peror attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed gullty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLOWANCE OF CREDITS TO DISBURSING OFFICERS

The bill (S. 885) to authorize and direct the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credit for all outstanding disallowances and suspensions in the accounts of the disbursing officers or agents of the Government for payments made to certain employees appointed by the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That nothwithstanding the provisions of section 203 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 403), as continued in effect during the fiscal years 1934 and 1935 by section 4 (a) of the act of March 3, 1933 (47 Stat. 1513), and section 24 of the act of March 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 522), the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow credit for all otherwise proper payments made to employees appointed by the United States Employees' Compensation Computers with by the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, with-out approval by the President of the United States, to fill vacan-cies resulting from the advancement of employees of lower grades in connection with the filling of a vacancy which the President had authorized to be filled; and no amount so paid shall be charged against or recovered from the employees to whom such payments were made.

MIKE CHETKOVICH

The bill (S. 1093) for the relief of Mike Chetkovich was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

OPENING OF SENATE SESSIONS WITH PRAYER

The resolution (S. Res. 8) providing for the opening of each calendar day's session of the Senate with prayer was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Chaplain shall open each calendar day's session of the Senate with prayer.

DEFINITION OF TERM "ONE DAY'S NOTICE" IN SENATE RULE

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 58), which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate be, and it is hereby, amended by adding, at the end thereof, the following:

"The one day's notice, required hereunder, in the case of a proposed suspension of a rule or part thereof, shall be deemed to mean a calendar day's notice."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I intend to ask that this resolution go over, not because I am opposed to the resolution but because the question of the definition of a "day" ought to be clarified throughout the rules of the Senate.

The question of what "1 day" means arises several times in the consideration of the rules of the Senate, notably in connection with the question of the approval of the Journal, notably in connection with the question of recognition on 1 day. While I am entirely in sympathy with the proposal here made, it seems to me it ought to be extended to cover the definition of "day" wherever that term occurs in the rules of the Senate, and I should like to see the resolution broadened so as to cover the definition of the term wherever it occurs in the rules. Therefore, because I think it affects but a part of a more important subject, I ask that the resolution go over.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there are two or three cases in which it is just as important that this question ought to be determined, for instance, in connection with the rule governing a motion to reconsider, in which the word "day" is used. We have always been interpreting the word "day" to mean legislative day, unless the rule expressly states "calendar day"

There is a resolution, which I offered, and which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Rules, which deals with just one question, a motion to suspend, modify, or amend a rule. The present rule requires that I day's notice in writing shall be given of such a motion. The Senate might be in recess from day to day for a month in which there would be but I legislative day, and the question might be raised as to whether the motion might not have to await the beginning of another legislative day. It is true that presiding officers have always held that in that particular case a calendar day was meant. The pending resolution is offered merely to carry out the rulings of the Senate in regard to that matter by indicating that a calendar day is meant.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. PITTMAN. In just a moment. The Senator from Missouri feels that this question ought to be clarified in connection with other matters of the same kind. For instance, in the rule governing notice of motion to reconsider a vote it is provided that such a motion must be made within 2 days of the decision of the question. That might mean 2 legislative days, and therefore might run over a month, so that the amendment of the rules might not be accomplished properly until the main subject had been disposed of. While presiding officers have constantly held that the expression meant a calendar day, by virtue of necessity, that has not been according to a strict interpretation of the rules.

In conferring with the chairman of the Committee on Rules just now I called his attention to that matter, and he agrees with the suggestion; and I had intended to offer a resolution covering the subject today.

The only objection I have to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri is that I think it would be better to proceed to clarify the ambiguous provisions as we come to them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, "1 day" appears several different times in the rules of the Senate, and it seems to me there should be a uniform construction of that term. It is constantly a subject of recurring debate, and sometimes there is acrimonious argument as to what the term "1 day" does mean.

I recall that a few years ago, in the consideration of a very important matter, the Senator who now occupies the floor being then in the chair, question was raised as to what the rule actually meant when it provided that a Senator should not address the Senate oftener than twice on the same day on any one question. Contrary rulings have been made by the Chair as to what "day" meant where that expression occurred at other places in the rules of the Senate, but the eminent President pro tempore of the Senate ruled that in the case of a Senator being permitted to address the Senate the term in the rule meant a legislative day.

It seems to me the definition as to these terms should be uniform, and should be made specific, so that the Senate would know what the practice of the Senate is and what the rules are, and what the rights of Senators are in debate on the floor, and that it should not be left for determination until a filibuster may be in progress, or the matter has to be decided in the heat of debate, and with reference to particular issues then pending before the Senate. I believe the Senate should soberly and seriously decide what these definitions should be. and decide what the rules and precedents ought to be. My objection does not go in the least to the particular measure proposed by the Senator from Nevada as to the particular rule covered, because I am thoroughly in favor of his suggestion. but to the fact that there ought to be a general recasting of definitions of terms in the Senate rules, and more particularly with regard to the definition of the particular term here in question, namely, the word "day."

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, let me suggest that while the President pro tempore has been in the Chair he has attempted to conform to the general rulings on subjects. The President pro tempore realizes that there should be a very careful study of the rules. I will say to the Senator from Missouri, however, that in the 26 years I have been here, a great many attempts have been made to amend the rules, and, so far as I recall, none of them has ever succeeded. I thought it probably would be advisable to amend the rules in those particulars as to which we all agree, and then, as we find other rules which ought to be modified, amend them if possible.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. I merely wanted to ask the Senator why the subject matter of his resolution could not be considered along with the amendment the Senator from Missouri has in mind. It seems to me that if we handle the matter piecemeal, it will not be as well handled, because some of us might be willing to favor this proposed amendment if we could have other amendments made as well.

Mr. PITTMAN. I merely suggest that for 25 years we have been trying to amend the rules, and I do not know that we have ever accomplished anything along that line. Certainly when the Senate agrees unanimously on a certain amendment of the rules, it is better policy to move along that line

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is not the so-called "legislative day" a mere fiction, after all? A couple of years ago it was held by the presiding officer—I do not know whether or not it was the President pro tempore—that when the term "day" occurs in the rules, it does not necessarily mean a day, but may mean 6 weeks, or 6 months, depending on how long a legislative day may run.

I am in agreement with the Senator from Missouri. The term "day" ought to mean a day wherever it occurs in the rules. I do not think we ought to say that the term "day" in one place means one thing and that "day" in another place means something else. The Senator from Nevada is a member of the Committee on Rules, is he not?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I am not.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator used to be?

Mr. PITTMAN. No.

Mr. CONNALLY. Was not the Senator chairman at one time?

Mr. PITTMAN. No.

Mr. CONNALLY. It seems to me the Committee on Rules ought to be instructed to consider this matter and bring in a resolution, or whatever may be necessary, designed to make the term "day" mean the same throughout the whole body of the rules. I, myself, do not have any doubt as to what those who first used the term "day" meant. They meant a day. They were thinking about the calendar; they were not thinking about a fiction, an imaginary pretense of a day, when it is not a day.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am advised, from the history of the discussion of the legislative day, that the legislative day was adopted in legislative bodies, generally speaking, for the purpose of making it possible to reach a final determination on some particular legislation. It was designed to hold a bill before the body until disposed of, and prevent the injection of other matters from time to time. There probably was in consideration also the prevention of a filibuster on each calendar day.

We have so few rules in this body which give the Senate control over debates that it has seemed to some of us that two speeches on a bill, without limit, without the unanimous consent of the Senate-which can always be gotten if Senators have not finished their speeches—are sufficient to enable a Senator to debate his subject. But that is purely a matter of opinion. I do not know how long the Committee on Rules would discuss the subject, or how long the Senate would discuss it, because there can be unlimited debate in the discussion of whether we will amend the rules. We discovered that several years ago when we tried to have a cloture rule adopted. We never got to a vote on the cloture rule, because we debated it 4 or 5 weeks.

I still think, with the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Texas, that it would be a very good thing to have certainty in the matter, but I have no hope of getting certainty in regard to some of these things very quickly, and therefore I hope to get certainty on the amendment covered by the pending resolution, on which we agree.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me say, Mr. President, that in all cases in which there has been a construction of the rules as to the term "1 day," it has been held to mean a legislative day. I think the most easily determined of the questions is in connection with the rule in question, having to do with the suspension of the rule, because the usual occasion of the offering of a motion to suspend the rules is in the case of the presentation of amendments to a general appropriation bill embodying legislation, in contravention of the rules of the Senate. I think that is one case in which a certain amount of delay might always be desirable and helpful.

For the reasons stated, Mr. President, I ask that until this question can be considered in its entirety, the resolution now before the Senate go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being heard, the resolution will be passed over.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2868) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state in order the committee amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 2, to insert the heading:

TITLE I-GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 2, to insert: SENATE

For payment to Frances S. Copeland, widow of Hon. Royal S. Copeland, late a Senator from the State of New York, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 6, to insert:

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, fiscal year 1938,

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 8, to

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, fiscal year 1939, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 10, to

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers of committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, fiscal year 1939, $100,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for per diem and subsistence expenses except in accordance with the provisions of the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, approved June 3, 1926, as

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 8, to insert:

INDEPENDENT ESTABLISHMENTS

MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MEMORIAL COMMISSION

Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission: For an additional amount for carrying into effect the provisions of the Mount Rushmore Memorial Act of 1938, fiscal year 1939, $75,000: Pro-vided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for work on any figure, in addition to the four figures authorized by law, upon which work had not commenced as of June 22, 1936.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 17, to

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

Grants to States for unemployment compensation administration, Social Security Board: For an additional amount for grants to States for unemployment compensation administration as author-ized in title III of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, fiscal year 1939, $9,000,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the amendment on page 3, after line 17, relating to the Social Security Board.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the occasion for the proposed appropriation is the report made by the Budget Director that the Social Security Board, under the provisions of the Social Security Act, is required to carry the administrative expenses of the State unemployment boards; that is, provide all the money with which to pay the expenses of the State boards which distribute the unemployment funds contributed by the Federal Government. That is the existing provision of law. An unexpected number of States have joined with the Government in this matter. Some 18 States have joined. The time has now arrived when the Board is practically out of money. The sum provided in the committee amendment is necessary to enable the Board to meet the costs of the State boards.

It ought to be said in addition that this appropriation does not end the deficiency for the present fiscal year. The original Social Security Act authorized the appropriation of $49,000,000 for the purpose in question. Forty million dollars has been appropriated. The appropriation in question is $9,000,000, the remainder of the amount authorized. The Board advises us that the $9,000,000 will not carry them clear to the end of the fiscal year, but the Appropriations Committee does not have authority to make further recommendations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 3 after line 17.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Agriculture—Forest Service", on page 4, line 23, after the numerals "1940", to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$5,000,000", and on page 5, line 2, after the figures "$300" and the colon, to strike out "Provided jurther, That the amount allocated for expenditure in any State of the amount herein appropriated shall be available when the State to which allocation has been made shall have made or shall make available a like sum from State funds for the purposes contained herein" and insert "Provided further, That of the amount herein appropriated the Federal Government shall not expend in any State an amount in excess of the amount heretofore or hereafter made available by said State, or the political subdivisions thereof, for the purposes contained in this paragraph", so as to read:

New England hurricane damage: For rehabilitation and reestablishment of forest protection improvements, reduction of forest-fire hazards, and prevention of forest fires on State, county, municipal, and private forest lands in the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecti-Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut, that were damaged by the hurricane of September 1938, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing and binding, and the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles, fiscal year 1939, to remain available until June 30, 1940, $5,000,000: Provided, That section 3709, Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), shall not apply in the case of any expenditure hereunder where the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $300: Provided further, That of the amount herein appropriated the Federal Government shall not expend in any State an amount in excess of the amount heretofore or hereafter made available. in excess of the amount heretofore or hereafter made available by said State, or the political subdivisions thereof, for the pur-poses contained in this paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 15, after the word "For", to strike out "the eradication of white fringed beetles, for", and in line 25, after the numerals "1939", to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$5,417,000", so as to read:

BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY AND PLANT QUARANTINE

Control of incipient and emergency outbreaks of insect pests and control of incipient and emergency outbreaks of insect pests and plant diseases: For carrying out the purposes and provisions of, and for expenditures authorized under, Public Resolution No. 91, Seventy-fifth Congress, entitled "Joint resolution to amend the joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution making funds available for the control of incipient or emergency outbreaks of insect pests or plant diseases, including grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, and chinch bugs, approved April 6, 1937," approved May 9, 1938 (52 Stat. 344, 1126), fiscal year 1939, to remain available until December 31, 1939, $5,417,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, after line 25, it is proposed to insert the following:

VITICULTURAL MARKETING REGULATIONS

Amend section 508 of an act entitled the "Liquor Tax Administration Act of June 26, 1936," which reads:
"Sec. 508. This title, except sections 502, 505, and 507, shall take effect when a majority of the members of the Federal Alcohol Administration first appointed under the provisions of section 502 qualify and take office", by adding after the figures "505" the figures "506", so as to make and intending thereby to make section 506 of title V of said Liquor Tax Administration Act immediately effective.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I have presented an amendment following line 25, on page 5. I call it to the attention of the Senator who is in charge of the bill, and I ask that he permit that amendment to be passed upon by the Senate. I recognize the parliamentary situation. I will state the purpose of the proposed amendment. There are certain kinds of liquors, particularly cognac, which are made in the State of California. Cognac made there comes under the designation "California cognac," so that there can be no deceit practiced and there can be no question as to where that liquor is manufactured. The Federal Alcohol Administration investigated the situation thoroughly at one time, and held that liquor which was manufactured in a particular locality, and was so designated, should not be held to be within the purview of the prohibition of the sale of that sort of liquor. The French, of course, did not like our selling of liquor under the name of "cognac," and therefore it was that in some way-I do not know how-the report of the Federal Alcohol Administration and its ruling were overthrown. The Treasury Department held that the Federal Alcohol Administration had made an incorrect ruling. We want the law, therefore, to provide in so many words what the Federal Alcohol Administration had formerly decreed. and what is right and just and fair so far as these liquors are concerned.

I have offered the amendment, and I ask the Senator whether he will let the Senate pass upon it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I regret very much that the obligation imposed upon me by the rules of the Appropriations Committee compels me to raise the point of order that the amendment proposes general legislation on an appropriation bill, because in its terms it is an amendment of the alcohol control law. I regret that I have to raise the point of order, I will say to the Senator from California, but that obligation is imposed upon me.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I think the point is well taken, Mr. President; but I threw myself for this time upon the mercy of the Senator from Colorado in the hope that the justice of the case being so appealing he would permit the amendment to go into the bill, as frequently amendments are permitted to be made to other appropriation bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained. The next amendment was, at the top of page 6, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

Claims for damages: For the payment of claims for damages to any person or damages to or loss of privately owned property caused by employees of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, acting within the scope of their employment, considered, adjusted, and determined by the Attorney General, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment and settlement of certain claims arising out of the activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation", approved March 20, 1936 (49 Stat. 1184), as fully set forth in Senate Document No. 16, Seventy-sixth Congress, $215.47

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Labor—Wage and Hour Division," on page 6, line 19, after the word "Division", to insert "to be expended under the direction of the Administrator"; in line 21, before the word "by", to strike out "it" and insert "him"; and on page 7, line 2, after the word "the", to strike out "Secretary of Labor" and insert "Administrator", so as to read:

Administration of the Fair Labor Standards Act, Department of Labor—Salaries and expenses: For an additional amount for all authorized and necessary expenses of the Wage and Hour Division, to be expended under the direction of the Administrator, in perto be expended under the direction of the Administrator, in performing the duties imposed upon him by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, contract stenographic reporting services, travel expenses, including not to exceed $2,500 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Wage and Hour Division when incurred on the written authority of the Administrator, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, printing and binding, lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals, manuscripts and special reports, newspapers and press clippings, supplies, office equipment, advertising, postage, telephone and telegraph service, reimbursement to State, Federal, and local agencies and their employees for services rendered, fiscal year 1939, $850,000. dered, fiscal year 1939, $850,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 7, to insert:

NAVY DEPARTMENT

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

Claims for damages by collision with naval vessels: To pay claims for damages adjusted and determined by the Secretary of the Navy under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels", approved December 28, 1922, as fully set forth in Senate Document No. 15, Seventy-sixth Congress, $9,474.92.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 17, to insert.

CHARLES F. KEGEL

The bill (S. 764) for the relief of Charles F. Kegel was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $450 to Charles F. Kegel, of Turner, Mont., in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for the loss of his truck, such truck having been destroyed on December 5, 1936, by a fire which burned a garage at Turner, Mont., in which it was stored for the purpose of safe-guarding its load, consisting of property used in connection with Resettlement Administration projects: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwith-standing. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That concludes the consideration of bills on the calendar.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORT FILED BY COMMITTEE DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under authority of the order of the Senate of the 2d instant, on February 3, 1939, during adjournment of the Senate,

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Norman S. Case, of Rhode Island, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission for a term of 7 years from July 1, 1938 (appointed during last recess of the Senate: reappointment).

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported favorably the nomination of Jacob Crane, of Illinois, to be Assistant Administrator and Director of Project Planning of the United States Housing Authority.

Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of James V. Allred, of Texas, to be United States district judge for the southern district of Texas.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Michael L. Igoe, of Illinois, to be United States district judge for the northern district of Illinois (now serving under a recess appointment).

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nomination of William J. Campbell, of Illinois, to be United States attorney for the northern district of Illinois, vice Michael L. Igoe.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE-WESTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Floyd H. Roberts, of Virginia, to be United States district judge for the western district of Virginia, which had been reported adversely from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss this nomination, if no other Senator does. However, I think we ought to have a roll call on the nomination. I therefore ask for the yeas and nays on the question of the confirmation of the nomination of Judge Roberts.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state the question. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Floyd H. Roberts, of Virginia, to be United States district judge for the western district of Virginia. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered. Those in favor of confirming the nomination will answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay."

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] is absent attending a meeting of the committee of the Massachusetts Legislature which is considering flood-control matters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The Chair thinks it advisable, for the information of the Senate, again to state the question before the Senate. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Floyd H. Roberts to be United States district judge for the western district of Virginia. Those in favor of confirmation will vote "yea," and those opposed will vote "nay." The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when Mr. Borah's name was called). The senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Bridges] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 72, as follows:

		YEAS—9

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, February 6, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou who art the uncreated One, our times are in Thy hands. We praise Thee for our Father's world. Do Thou substitute the higher unity as revealed in our Lord and Master for the clanging discord of nations. Loose our country from all fears and may it see aright. Clothe the Congress with a compelling strength; may we be the sons of the morning, walking and laboring in the light and promise of a new day. Unaffrighted by the skies above, undismayed by the earth beneath, help us to learn more of the deeper, richer meaning of the ministry of our Saviour. For the day and hour, for the moments of victory and for the scenes of defeat, for the pleasures of the happy and for the sorrows of the sad, may we be grateful with a song in the heart. Just now, our Father, our thoughts are wrapped in the shadows. Comfort Thou the stricken parents and may The Tree of Life stretch its perfumed branches above their appealing gaze. Heaven would be so lonesome without such as Millard. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 3, 1939, was read and approved.

CONSENT CALENDAR

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, there is only one bill on the Consent Calendar, reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. The gentleman from Texas, Mr. Sumners, is not here. I therefore ask unanimous consent that business in order on the Consent Calendar for today may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 38.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the limit of expenditures under the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution creating a special joint congressional committee to make an investigation of the Tennessee Valley Authority," approved April 4, 1938, is hereby increased by the sum of $25,000, such additional sum to be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the special joint congressional committee created by such joint resolution. The final report of such committee shall be made on or before April 1, 1939, but the chairman of the committee is authorized to continue such clerical help as found necessary for the indexing, proofreading, filing, and distribution of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Thomason]?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like a minute or two to develop a matter with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Thomason]. I do not propose to object. As we know, this joint resolution deals with an extension of time for the investigation of the T. V. A. The gentleman from Texas will remember that a few days ago he and I had this matter up with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Wolverton], and it was practically agreed that this matter should be brought up by unanimous consent and that there would be no objection. As far as I am concerned, I have no objection except there is one thing maybe the gentleman can clarify us on. I notice in the newspaper a statement to the effect that Senator Donahey, chairman of the investigating committee, stated there would be no further investigation. The gentleman will remember when we had our last meeting the understanding was when we got this resolution through we would continue the investigation. There is a list of witnesses and we want to hear these witnesses. It will not be at all satisfactory to us if this is not done. It will not be satisfactory if the majority of the committee, and the gentleman knows what I mean when I say "majority," have decided to discontinue further hearings.

Mr. THOMASON. Of course, I do not undertake to speak for the chairman of the committee, the distinguished Senator from Ohio. All I can say at this time is there has been no meeting or determination by the majority members of the committee as to the future program. Of course, I do not undertake to speak for the committee. That is a matter for determination, I presume, when Senator Donahey calls the entire committee back for consideration of the future program. I have no more idea what the plans will be than the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman remembers, I think, full well that was our understanding when we adjourned just about the holiday time. We had not concluded examination of all the witnesses and we had not made a report. We made no effort to make a report, and the understanding was we should have some further hearings, not very many. I know it was not the intention to string the hearings out, but we did have a few witnesses to hear.

Mr. THOMASON. I do not think there was any formal action taken in reference to exactly what would be done. However, I recall no disposition on the part of anybody to foreclose anyone regarding any important or unfinished matter.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is what I want to bring out. The gentleman does not know at this time that anything has been done since we adjourned formally just before the holidays?

Mr. THOMASON. I am certain there has not been, at least not to my knowledge.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. With that understanding, I withdraw my reservation of objection; but I want the House to know and understand that was the express intention and that was the understanding. Of course, we will need the money provided in this resolution to pay some of the bills that have been incurred.

Mr. THOMASON. I may say the help has not been paid since the 1st of January. I would like to make it clear, however, I do not speak for the majority members of the committee, neither do I commit myself as to what the future course may be. All I can say is, as far as I know there has been do determination of the matter up to this time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I want the membership of the House to know that was the understanding; and if there is any disposition or if any action has been taken to change that understanding, then we have not been informed of it and we should be informed.

Mr. THOMASON. So far as I know, no formal action has been taken on the matter. There was some informal discussion about brief hearings for certain witnesses to close up certain unfinished matters. I do not think there was any definite program even seriously considered, much less determined upon. Senator Davis was present at the meeting I attended, and as I understood it he spoke for Mr. Jenkins of Ohio and Mr. WOLVERTON.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not agree with the gentleman in that respect. I know there was an understanding that we should have the privilege of examining additional witnesses, and I know we left a list of witnesses with the chairman and I know as we approached the holiday season that was the general understanding among those who were there that that was to be the program.

Mr. THOMASON. If any formal action was taken, the minutes of the meeting will disclose it.

At this time I know nothing about the future course. All I can tell the gentleman is what I recall happened at the meeting I attended.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I wanted the Congress to know that was the understanding. If it does not work out that way, someone will have to answer for it.

Mr. THOMASON. This is a matter for the consideration of the committee.

Mr. WARREN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not approve of bringing up a resolution like this by unanimous consent, and I do not believe the House approves it, but under the circumstances I shall not object for the following reasons:

This is a Senate joint resolution. If an objection or a point of order were made, the resolution would then have to go before the Committee on Rules and then later come before the Committee on Accounts.

On the last day of the last session of Congress the House passed unanimously a resolution giving this committee $50,000 additional. This resolution was lost in the adjournment shuffle in the Senate. Now, instead of asking for $50,000 additional, they have asked for $25,000, half of which would come from the contingent fund of the House. In view of the action of the House on the last day of the last session, I shall not object.

Mr. THOMASON. May I say in reply to the gentleman from North Carolina that I am in thorough accord with the policy the gentleman announces. However, as stated by him, the House voted $50,000, but the resolution was lost in the shuffle in the Senate.

I hope I will be pardoned if I say this has been a hard-working, economical committee. The help has not been paid since January 1. This resolution passed the Senate unanimously, and, but for the emergency, I must be frank to say I would not have undertaken to bring the matter up in this way.

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, do I correctly understand that the resolution carrying the $50,000 which was voted by the House was lost in the adjournment shuffle in the Senate?

Mr. THOMASON. It did not even get to the Senate floor. There was a misunderstanding or oversight in the committee in the Senate and therefore the appropriation was never made and never available.

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, may I say a letter has come to me, not from anyone in my district or in the State of Michigan, but I presume because the writer anticipated this matter would come before the Committee on Rules, calling attention to the salary being paid to the counsel for this committee and also to the salary of the engineer-investigator. The gentleman from Texas states the committee has been an economical one.

Mr. THOMASON. Yes; and I stand by that statement.

Mr. MAPES. The writer of the letter, as I recall—I do not have the letter with me as I did not know this resolution was coming up for consideration this morning—states rather definitely that the committee has been paying the counsel for the committee $15,000 and the engineer-investigator $10,000. Does the gentleman know if that statement is correct?

Mr. THOMASON. I believe that is wrong. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Jenkins] will correct me if I am mistaken. As I recall, this committee was set up about the 1st of July, and an agreement was made to pay the counsel, I believe, approximately $10,000 for the job. It turned out later that because of some regulation regarding maximum salaries of $9,000 that was the most we could pay him. I am sure the engineer was paid at about the same rate, but I am not certain about it. Both of these men are able and experienced, and the gentleman from Ohio will confirm my statement I am sure. They have both worked hard and earned more than the amount paid them, whether the gentleman from Ohio agrees with the results or not.

Mr. MAPES. Has the committee kept up its payments to those two men?

Mr. THOMASON. As I understand from the Senator from Ohio, the chairman of the committee, and more especially from the clerk of the committee, no one has been paid anything since the 1st day of January.

Mr. MAPES. Is it intended to pay to these two men out of the additional $25,000 now proposed more than the $9,000 or $10,000 mentioned?

Mr. THOMASON. I am unable to answer the gentleman's inquiry because the committee has had no formal session, I believe, with all members present, and has had no opportunity to discuss that matter. However, the resolution provides only for the payment of the clerk and the necessary help.

Mr. MAPES. I may say to the gentleman that if I had known this resolution was coming up this morning I would have looked into this matter before this, but I was impressed with the statements in this letter by reason of the resolution which was in effect limiting to $300 per month the pay anyone working for an investigating committee could receive. Does that restriction apply to joint committees?

Mr. THOMASON. I am advised it does not. Our former colleague, now the junior Senator from New York [Mr.

MEAD] and other members of the committee took that question up with the departments. I do not know just how the matter was adjusted but I believe it was determined that the $3,600 limitation did not apply to counsel and engineers in an investigation of this sort. I believe the gentleman from Ohio will agree that is correct.

Mr. WARREN. If the gentleman will yield, I can inform the gentleman on that situation. We did have a $300 per month limitation, and I very greatly regret that Congress repealed that limitation.

Mr. MAPES. The limitation has been repealed?

Mr. WARREN. It has been absolutely repealed. I believe we still ought to have it. With the repeal of that limitation the employees of special committees go under the Classification Act and must qualify under it.

Mr. THOMASON. That is what the departments advised

Mr. MEAD.

Mr. MAPES. Can the gentleman from North Carolina tell the House definitely what the counsel for this joint committee has received?

Mr. WARREN. No; I cannot say at this time. I can only tell you the general expenditures and they are in accordance with the Classification Act.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I may say that was taken up with the proper authorities and they approved the entire program, and the committee ratified same.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. My understanding is they took the matter up and they found that this committee was not bound by any law or any regulation and Mr. Biddle, of Philadelphia, was employed as counsel, starting, I think, about the 1st of May or the 10th of May, the employment to run until the end of the year, assuming we would finish the 1st of January. The resolution provided for a flat sum of $10,000. The engineer, as I recall it, made a showing that he was employed in Los Angeles at a salary of $25,000 and was going to give the committee 6 months of his time and would expect $12,000 as his compensation for the time he would give the committee. So I think $10,000 for the counsel and $12,000 for the engineer were the amounts expected to be paid.

Mr. THOMASON. I am not sure, but I think that is substantially correct.

Mr. WARREN. Up to the 1st of January, $28,293.63 was spent in salaries. These vouchers have been audited by the Committee on Accounts and they are all within the Classification Act.

Mr. THOMASON. That is right.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. If they are within the Classification Act, the Committee could not pay the counsel $10,000 for his services from the 1st of July until the 1st of January, for example, as indicated by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WARREN. Right now I do not recall what is the maximum salary under the Classification Act.

Mr. THOMASON. I think it is $9,000.

Mr. MAPES. If it is $9,000 per year, it could not be $10,000 for 6 months.

Mr. WARREN. It is on an annual basis.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes] that this has been one of the most economically conducted investigating committees I have ever known, and the amount of money they have spent on an honest investigation, in my opinion, will not amount to 1 percent of the amount the power companies spent on propaganda trying to offset the real information this committee was developing. The American people have saved a great deal by the economy of this committee—not only their economy, but their honest investigation of this situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I do not care to discuss the power question now with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Rankin]; but, if we concede for the purpose of the argument that this has been an economical committee, these two men have received, according to the statements that have been made here, practically all that the committee has paid out for investigation work.

Mr. RANKIN. These two men have not received as much money as one of the Power Trust lawyers who opposed them.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and in view of the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi just made, I am not going to object, but I serve notice that in the future I shall object to any such unanimous-consent request for the appropriation of any money for any committees.

Mr. THOMASON. I think, Mr. Speaker, I have explained the situation that developed in connection with this matter so that this is an exception to the rule.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hear much from men on that side of the House who are going to object to the spending of money, but I never hear them object. Why do they not get up here and object to some of these expenditures once in a while?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs may be permitted to sit during sessions of the House today and tomorrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this agreeable to the minority members of the committee?

Mr. MAY. Yes; it was understood in committee this morning that we would meet at 2 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a letter I have written to the Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL-1940

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 3743, Rept. No. 23) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

Mr. RICH rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield for that purpose?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No, Mr. Speaker; I cannot yield for that purpose at this time. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill H. R. 3743, the independent offices appropriation bill, and pending that I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue throughout the day, the time to be equally divided between myself and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Wiggles-worth].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3743. Pending that, he asks unanimous consent that general debate continue throughout the day, the time to be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Wigglesworth]. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill, with Mr. LANHAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield 2 minutes to me?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I have heard much on the floor of the House about some very influential Members cutting down expenses, and that Members were going to object when matters were brought up appropriating funds. But I do not see much objection. "Actions speak louder than words." call the attention of the House to the fact that we are $2,046,-000,000 in the red-Government statement February 1, since July 1-with 7 months of this fiscal year gone, and at that rate we will be close to $4,000,000,000 in the red at the end of the fiscal year. A horrible situation. A deplorable condition. A travesty. We are having emergency appropriations that are bigger and better and wider and fatter. All kinds of propositions are going to come to the House for more money. and it is up to the membership of this House to guard the Treasury of the United States, or we will be having inflation, or deflation, or we will have taxes so high that the people of this country will not be able to stand them. If you are going to go ahead and run this Government as you have during the last 4 years, then it is time, I say, that the membership of the House wake up; otherwise it will be too late for America to survive the New Deal. Where are you going to get the money? We are now going to discuss an appropriation bill, and we are going to be told that it will be less than last year; but remember this: They are true to form, bigger and fatter appropriations. When you get the emergencies into the bill, you will have $250,000,000 more than we thought it was going to carry, and I warn the chairman of this committee and the Members of the House that you should object to some of these items and cut this bill by $350,000,000. It can and should be

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I put my friend from Pennsylvania on notice, when he brings in the Interior Department appropriation bill, that I want to hear him make an economy speech on that bill.

Mr. RICH. I would do it if I could, and I am working like everything, and I am going down now to the committee room to go to work; but it is going to be an awfully hard job to get the subcommittee to be economical. I could guarantee my colleague from Virginia, for whom I have the greatest respect, that if I had my way I could cut the bill at least 20 percent and do it easily and justly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am going to impose upon the Committee and talk again upon the subject of relief and unemployment expenditures. On the 5th of January the President sent to the Congress a special message upon the subject of relief and unemployment. I recall to your minds a brief paragraph in that message, which I now

I realize that the Congress may wish to prescribe by legislation the manner in which funds appropriated to the Works Progress Administration and other appropriations shall be distributed. However, the problem of distributing work relief funds is a com-However, the problem of distributing work relief runds is a complicated one involving factors not only of population but of economic and unemployment conditions in various sections of the country. The hasty adoption of legislative provisions, to be immediately effective, which radically change the present method of distributing Works Progress Administration funds would greatly complicate the administration of the program in the coming months. I therefore believe that the Congress should make this guestion the subject of study and hearings, with a yiew to deterquestion the subject of study and hearings, with a view to determining a policy to obtain in the fiscal year 1940, but that the appropriation recommended in this message should be made on the same terms as that for the first part of the fiscal year 1939.

Mr. Chairman, let it be thoroughly understood that what I am about to say reflects only my own individual opinions. I have not talked with anyone at the other end of the Avenue nor with anyone at the other end of the Capitol. I have not counselled with any of my colleagues here except the legislative drafting service, because I wanted to bring and drop into the hopper, as I have just done, a bill for your consideration and study, inviting your criticism, your comment, and your calm deliberate legislative judgment. I do emphasize, however, especially to the members of my own party, this phrase in the President's message:

I therefore believe that Congress should make this question the subject of study and hearings, with a view to determining a policy to obtain in the fiscal year 1940.

Therefore, I feel that as a member of the party in power I can bring to you the suggestion that we should initiate thought, discussion, and study of this vital problem. I cannot account for that phrase in the President's message unless it meant that he realized, as practically all American citizens realize, that the subject should be given thought and study; that it is not a perfect system; that it is not a perfect program. So I have dropped into the hopper what will be known as House Joint Resolution 151, suggesting a plan for the handling of relief and unemployment relief during the fiscal year of 1940. The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 151) is as follows:

Resolved, etc.,

SECTION 1. That in order to provide for the relief of unemployment and for direct relief, in the United States and its Territories ment and for direct relief, in the United States and its Territories and possessions, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and to remain available until such date, the sum of $1,120,000,000, together with the balances of allocations heretofore made or hereafter to be made to the Works Progress Administration under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 and the joint resolution of 1939, which remain unobligated on June 30, 1939, to be expended, subject to the provisions hereinafter stated, (a) in furnishing direct relief and unemployment relief; (b) in furnishing direct relief and unemployment relief in cooperation with States, municipalities, and other public bodies; and (c) in making grants to States, municipalities, and other public bodies for direct relief and unemployment relief. ployment relief.

SEC. 2. On and after July 1, 1939, the Works Progress Administration, established by Executive Order No. 7034, dated May 6, 1935, pursuant to the provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, shall be known as the Unemployment Relief Administration; and all laws, Executive orders, and other docu-ments referring to the Works Progress Administration shall be deemed to refer to the Unemployment Relief Administration. Any administrator of the Unemployment Relief Administration hereafter appointed shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 3. The Administrator of the Unemployment Relief Admin-SEC. 3. The Administrator of the Unemployment Relief Administration (hereinafter referred to as the Administrator) shall submit to the Congress, prior to May 15, 1939, a statement of the funds which will be required from the foregoing appropriation for projects for the relief of unemployment in each of the States, the District of Columbia, the Territory of Hawaii, the Territory of Alaska, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the Canal Zone, during each month of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, with a detailed summary of the factors on the basis of which such statement is made, and the Congress shall, not later than June 30, 1939, allocate not to exceed $1,000,000,000 of the foregoing appropriation for expenditure on unemployment-relief projects in the several States, the District of Columbia, the Territory of Hawali, the Territory of Alaska, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the Canal Zone during each month of such fiscal year, and the amounts so allocated are authorized to be expended on unemployment-relief projects by the Unemployment Relief Administration, directly or in cooperation with States, municipalities, and other public bodies for such projects: Provided, That the Administrator may increase the amount to be so expended during any month in any State, Territory, district, or possession by not to exceed 10 percent of the aggregate expenditures so allocated for such State, Territory, district, or possession for such month: Provided further, That no grants shall be made to any State, municipality, or other public body, unless the Administrator shall have determined that such State, municipality, or other public body has established a satisfactory plan of unemployment relief and for the administration thereof.

established a satisfactory plan of unemployment relief and for the administration thereof.

On or prior to June 25, 1939, and on or prior to the 25th day of each month thereafter the Administrator shall file with the Congress, if in session, and if not in session with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, a classified summary of unemployment-relief projects and proposed expenditures for unemployment relief, including cash grants, in each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Territory of Hawaii, the Territory of Alaska, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the Canal Zone, for the ensuing month, within the respective amounts authorized to be expended pursuant to the provisions of this section.

SEC. 4. The sum of $120,000,000, together with all other sums appropriated hereby and not allocated for unemployment relief projects pursuant to section 3 hereof, shall be available to the President for expenditure through the Unemployment Relief Administration or such other agency or agencies as the President may designate, for any purpose specified in section 1 of this act: Provided, That within 10 days after any allocation of such funds the President shall file with the Congress, if in session, and if not in session with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, a statement of the amount and purpose of each such allocation and the session with the Cierk of the House of Representatives, a state-ment of the amount and purpose of each such allocation and the reason therefor: Provided further, That quarterly during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the President shall file with the Con-gress, if in session, and if not in session with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, an account of all expenditures of such funds made pursuant to this section during the 3 months preced-ing the filing of such account.

year ending June 30, 1940, the President shall file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, an account of all expenditures of such funds made pursuant to this section during the 3 months preceding the filing of such account.

Sec. 5. The Administrator shall procure quarterly during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, from the Governor or authorized agency of each State, Territory, and possession, and from the Commissioners or authorized agency of the District of Columbia, and shall file with the Congress, if in session, and from the Commissioners or authorized agency of the District of Columbia, and shall file with the Congress, if in session, and if not in session with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, a report in reasonable detail containing the following information for the preceding 3 months' period: (a) the average number of persons employed on unemployment relief projects and the average compensation paid to each of such persons during each month of such period; (b) the average number of persons receiving direct relief and the average amount of relief funds paid to each of such period; (d) the average number of persons eligible for direct relief and unemployment relief and to direct relief during each month of such period; (d) the average number of persons eligible for direct relief and unemployment relief in the State and in each of its subdivisions during each month of such period, as shown by the rolls with respect thereto; and (e) such other information pertaining to relief and unemployment as the Administrator shall require.

Sec. 6. (a) In order to insure fulfillment of the purpose for which the appropriation herein authorized is made, no person shall receive compensation from the funds to be expended pursuant to section 3 of this act unless his name shall appear on a roll of persons eligible for employment on unemployment relief projects, prepared or approved by the Administrator, such person is employment, is not eligible for any other form of Federal or local assistance in an a

SEC. 7. The rates of pay for persons employed on unemployment relief projects under section 3 of this act shall be not less than the prevailing rates of pay for work of a similar nature in the same locality as determined by the Administrator: Provided, That if minimum rates of pay for persons employed by private employers in any occupation are established by or pursuant to the authority conferred by any labor standards act enacted at the third session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, not less than the minimum rates of pay so established shall be paid to persons in similar occupations in the same locality employed on unemployment relief projects under section 3 of this act. under section 3 of this act.

SEC. 17. This joint resolution may be cited as the "Unemployment Relief Appropriation Act of 1939."

I think there are two reasons why the matter should be initiated now. In the first place, the Committee on Appropriations, or, if the Congress should wish to set up a special committee, that committee ought to have calm, deliberate, and thoughtful hearings. We have not had that heretofore. We have usually gotten, in the closing days of the session, emergency estimates for relief, and have had to rush into hearings and rush out of them. We have usually confined our hearings to those who appeared for the department and for different groups of citizens seeking to enlarge the amounts of money appropriated. I believe the Congress should hear from other groups of American citizens, from business and professional people, women's organizations, from anyone who has given the matter thoughtful study, and who can make a contribution to the problem in order that we may have the benefit of their judgment and advice. I also believe the committee should have an opportunity of hearing Members of Congress who have studied this matter. Undoubtedly there are many Members of this body who could make contributions to this very interesting and very perplexing problem.

Therefore, I have introduced this resolution with the hope that it will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and with the hope that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will permit us at an early date to open the hearings and proceed along in a calm, leisurely manner to investigate, explore, survey, hear, and consider, and then, of course, to be ready to hear whatever the President and the Bureau of the Budget wish to say to us on the subject when the time comes. Only in such a way will Congress be able to take real, deliberate legislative action.

The bill that I have introduced contains no very novel or sensational features. Its objective is to furnish relief and assistance to needy worthy American citizens with the least amount of routine and red tape and the very minimum of overhead charges and administrative expenses. I believe that unemployment is a national problem. I believe that certainly in the immediate future the Federal Government is going to have to recognize it. We will have to have a part in the program for this relief, but the objective should never be lost sight of that we should always encourage the American citizen to take care of himself, and our ultimate objective should always be to bring about such economic solidarity and stability that able-bodied employable people will not have to ask help from the Government, but will be able to take care of themselves. That is the objective of this legislation—to furnish real relief to people who really need relief.

If anyone should be interested in furnishing relief to worthy politicians I cannot offer them much consolation in this bill. If anyone should be interested in trying to create jobs for administrative personnel I cannot offer them much hope in this bill; but I do believe that this bill, administered fairly; and honestly and sincerely and earnestly, will afford the maximum amount of relief at the minimum amount of cost.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would prefer to proceed if the Committee will permit me. I do not want to take a lot of time. I would like to briefly review what is in the bill, and then if there is time I will submit to questions if anyone wishes to ask me.

I do not include in this proposal anything for the Farm Security Administration or for the National Youth Administration. Those two matters are left for future consideration in such manner as they should come up. I undertake to treat in this bill, which I will now proceed to discuss more or less in a detailed way, purely the question of unemployment relief.

House Joint Resolution 151 appropriates $1,120,000,000 for the relief of unemployment and for direct relief during the fiscal year 1940, of which $1,000,000,000 is to be expended through the Works Progress Administration, to be known after June 30, 1939, as the Unemployment Relief Administration, on unemployment relief projects, and $120,000,000 of which is made available to the President for expenditure at his direction on unemployment relief projects, in direct relief, or in cash grants to local communities for relief purposes. The bill provides that of the billion dollars made available to the Unemployment Relief Administration the amounts to be expended in each State for each month of the fiscal year shall be determined by Congress not later than June 30, 1939.

The Unemployment Relief Administration is given authority to furnish relief by employment on work projects, either alone or in cooperation with States, municipalities, and other local agencies. It also is empowered to make grants to States, municipalities, and other local public bodies for expenditure on work projects for relief of the unemployed. As the bill provides for a marked reduction in the administrative staff of the Unemployment Relief Administration by January 1, 1940, a considerable proportion of the funds appropriated will necessarily have to be expended by way of grants to local communities. The expenditure of funds in this manner is amply safeguarded, however, as the Unemployment Relief Administration must select or approve the work projects to be undertaken, and will determine the eligibility for employment on such projects. As time will be required for local communities to establish adequate machinery for administering work projects, and because of a wide variation in conditions throughout the United States, the provisions of the bill have been made sufficiently flexible to permit the Unemployment Relief Administration to arrange the work-projects program in every community according to the circumstances there existing, with a view to turning over to the community as soon as it demonstrates its ability to handle the problem the entire management and control of its unemployment relief work, subject only to certain necessary Federal supervision and approval of the relief rolls.

The bill establishes certain qualifications for inclusion on the rolls of those eligible for employment on work projects. It prohibits the use of any funds appropriated on construction projects which ordinarily would be constructed by contract. This provision will eliminate from the relief program construction projects for which Federal aid is made available through other agencies of the Government. The bill directs the Administrator of the Unemployment Relief Administration to file with Congress every 3 months a comprehensive report of the unemployment and relief situation in each State.

A synopsis of the bill by sections follows:

Section 1: The bill appropriates $1,120,000,000, together with unobligated balances, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, to be expended—

(a) in furnishing direct relief and unemployment relief;

(b) in furnishing direct relief and unemployment relief in cooperation with States, municipalities, and other public bodies;

(c) in making grants to States, municipalities, and other public bodies for direct relief and unemployment relief.

Section 3: Prior to May 15, 1939, the U. R. A. is to be known as the Unemployment Relief Administration. Any Administrator of the Unemployment Relief Administration hereafter appointed is to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Section 3: Prior to May 15, 1939, the U. R. A. Administrator must submit to Congress a statement of the funds to be required for projects for the relief of unemployment in the several States, Territories, possessions, and the District of Columbia, during each month of the fiscal year 1940. The statement must be accompanied by a detailed summary of the factors on the basis of which such statement is made. Not later than June 30, 1939, Congress shall allocate not to exceed $1,000,000,000 of the appropriation made by the act for expenditure on unemployment relief projects in the several States, Territories, possessions, and the District of Columbia during each month of the fiscal year, such expenditure to be made by the Unemployment Relief Administration, directly or in cooperation with States, municipalities, and other public bodies or by making grants to States. municipalities, and other public bodies for such projects. The U. R. A. Administrator is given the right to increase the amount to be expended in any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia, during any month by not to exceed 10 percent. No grants may be made to any State, municipality, or other public body unless the U. R. A. Administrator shall have determined that it has established a satisfactory plan of unemployment relief and for administration of such relief.

On the 25th of each month the U. R. A. Administrator must file with Congress, or with the Clerk of the House, if Congress is not in session, a classified summary of proposed unemployment relief projects and expenditures, including cash grants, for the ensuing month in each State, Territory, possession, and the District of Columbia, within the amounts authorized to be expended pursuant to the above provisions.

Section 4: One hundred and twenty million dollars, together with all other sums appropriated by the act and not allocated to the States, and so forth, for unemployment relief projects as provided by section 3 is made available to the President to expend through the U. R. A., or any other agency the President may designate, for any purpose specified in section 1. Any allocation of these funds must be reported by the President within 10 days of such allocation, and a report of expenditures under this section must be made to Congress every 3 months.

Section 5: The U. R. A. Administrator is required to file with Congress quarterly a report from the Governor or authorized agency of each State, Territory, possession, and the District of Columbia for the preceding 3-month period containing the following information:

(a) The average number of persons and the average compensation paid on unemployment relief projects during each month of such period;

(b) The average number of persons receiving direct relief and the average amount of relief funds paid to each person on relief during each month of such period;

(c) The total contribution made by the State and by each of its subdivisions to unemployment relief and to direct relief during each month of such period;

(d) The average number of persons eligible for direct relief and unemployment relief in the State and in each of its subdivisions during each month of such period, as shown by the relief rolls: and

(e) Such other information pertaining to relief, work relief, and unemployment as the Administrator may require. Section 6: (a) The payment of compensation from funds expended pursuant to section 3 of the act is limited to those whose names appear on unemployment relief rolls prepared or approved by the U. R. A. Administrator.

(b) To be eligible for inclusion on unemployment relief rolls a person must have the following qualifications, in the determination of the U.R.A. Administrator:

(1) He must be employable.

(2) He must have made a reasonable effort without success to find private employment.

(3) He cannot be eligible for any other form of Federal or local assistance in an amount sufficient to maintain him and those dependent upon him.

(4) He or his dependents will suffer actual want or privation if he is not included in the program of work relief.

(c) No person may be employed on an unemployment relief project for a continuous period of more than 12 months, or for more than 12 months in any 15-month period, after January 1, 1939, and thereafter he loses his relative position on the unemployment relief rolls and is placed at the end of the list.

(d) Persons on unemployment relief rolls who accept private employment may return to such rolls after termination of such employment in the same relative status as they occupied before.

(e) A refusal without cause to accept available private employment will result in the person concerned losing his relative position on the unemployment relief rolls and being placed at the end of the list.

Section 7: The provision of the 1938 act with respect to prevailing rates of pay is embodied in the present bill.

Section 8: No project may hereafter be undertaken with funds to be expended under section 3 of this act which ordinarily would be constructed under contract or otherwise than by the forces of the State, municipality or other public body providing a portion of the cost of such project.

Section 9: The provisions in the bill with respect to preference in employment on work-relief projects and the elimination of aliens from work-relief rolls are identical with those approved in the conference report with respect to House Joint Resolution 83.

Section 10: It is made a felony for any administrative employee to engage in political activity.

Section 11: It is made a felony for any person to solicit or accept a contribution for political purposes from anyone on relief rolls prepared or approved under this act or from anyone who is receiving relief under this act. It is also made a felony for one to threaten any such person in order to secure contributions or support.

Section 12: An appropriation for administrative expenses of the Unemployment Relief Administration is provided, and in this connection the U. R. A. is restricted after December 31, 1939, to 1,500 employees in the District of Columbia and 5,000 outside the District of Columbia.

Section 13: The President is authorized to make the expenditures necessary for carrying out the purposes of section 4 of the act.

Section 14: The U. R. A. Administrator is authorized to prescribe the necessary rules and regulations to carry out the purposes of the act.

Section 15: Purchases of supplies involving less than $300 are exempted from the public-advertisement provision of the Federal statutes.

Section 16: Fraud and unlawful diversion of funds are declared to be misdemeanors punishable by fine and imprisonment.

Section 17: The act is to be known as the Unemployment Relief Appropriation Act of 1939.

I provide in this bill, section 8, that there shall be no heavy construction projects undertaken by the Unemployment Relief Administrator; and I wish to say in this connection that to this extent at least I do not agree with the conclusions contained in the very interesting and very helpful study made by the so-called Byrnes committee. I believe it would not be logical to undertake to combine in one organization the Public Works Administration and the Works Progress Administration, the National Youth Administration, and the Civilian Conservation Corps. Especially antagonistic are the very purposes and the very approach to the problem of P. W. A. and W. P. A. The Public Works Administration, while it seeks to increase employment, relies upon indirect employment. It does not deal with relief labor. It undertakes to increase employment by stimulating business and through increased commerce, the manufacturing, processing, and transporting of materials undertakes to create permanent jobs for skilled labor-and also, of course, for unskilled labor; whereas the Relief Administration is purely temporary. It seeks to give men a security wage, to tide them over between times of permanent employment. I believe we would not get anywhere by undertaking to saddle on the Public Works Administration the administration of relief. The Public Works Administration, in my judgment, has done a fine job, and I call your attention to page 1240 of the hearings on the independent offices bill in which report it is set out. I shall read briefly from the report:

The greatest effect on the relief of the unemployed by any Public Works Administration program yet launched will reach its peak in the spring and summer months of 1939 when nearly $1,000,000,000 in material orders will be placed with manufacturers of construction materials. It has been estimated, on the basis of figures established by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, through extensive research, that in producing, fabricating, manufacturing, and transporting these materials more than one and one-fourth billion man-hours of employment will be created. In addition to this enormous amount of indirect or behind the lines employment, there will be provided by the 1938 program, approximately 500,000,000 man-hours of direct (site) employment. This employment, however, will be more evenly distributed over the entire construction period, the peak to be reached in midsummer 1939, when a weekly average of approximately 500,000 men will be employed.

As stated, I carry in this bill the political inhibitions substantially as they are carried in the conference report which we adopted a few days ago.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I carry in this bill another provision which I think will be wholesome. In section 6 (c) I provide that those on relief rolls who have been there for 12 consecutive months shall stand aside and the opportunity given to people who have not shared or participated in that program. I make this provision effective January 1, 1940. When it goes into effect there will be, according to information before our committee, three or four hundred thousand W. P. A. workers who have been on this program since its inception 4 or 5 years ago. In addition to that, there are between 750,000 and a million American citizens eligible and ready to be certified for W. P. A. who have never had any part in the program, a great army of people who have scratched the bottom of the flour barrel, who are standing back waiting while another and more favored group are receiving all of the benefits of Government relief.

Let us bear this in mind when we approach this problem of relief. It is a discussion about which we may get very emotional and very melodramatic if we wish to do so. For instance, I saw a statement which came from a distinguished legislator not long ago in which he stated he could not bear to think of cutting the recent emergency appropriation from $875,000,000 to $725,000,000 because it would mean that people would be without employment and would be hungry.

Mr. Chairman, there have been fourteen or fifteen million able-bodied American citizens unemployed all during this program and only about 3,000,000 of them have ever gotten on the W. P. A. rolls. Who has been shedding tears about the other eight or nine million? Where have they been all the time? They have been just as hungry as the rest of them. The 750,000 who are standing on the side lines are just as much American citizens as the man who has been on relief 4 or 5 years. The 750,000 are just as much entitled to consideration from the Government as the rest of those who have been getting all of it. So I say, let us divide the blessings of Government up a little bit and if a man has had it for 4 or 5 years we will give him 6 months' notice that he is going to have to step aside and let some poor, unfortunate man or woman take his place.

Also I provide in this bill for a drastic reduction in the administrative personnel and overhead of the relief program. Evidence before our committee showed that W. P. A. now has about 2,000 on its Washington staff and 35,000 in the field. I venture to suggest that a lot of the political difficulties that W. P. A. has gotten into have been on account of that army of 35,000 administrative personnel scattered all over the country. I provide in this bill that we may utilize the State agencies and State employees for the administration of this program and that in the field there shall not be at any time in excess of 5,000 administrative employees and that in the home office there shall not be in excess of 1,500 administrative employees. Bear in mind if you take off the rolls or replace 35,000 administrative people in the field, you have made places for 100,000 relief workers at security wages. If you take away from the W. P. A. its heavy construction program you have permitted them to drastically reduce their heavy administrative expenses in running this program, consequently cutting down its administrative costs.

I could go on ad infinitum. As I stated in the beginning, there is nothing novel or sensational about this bill. I have no pride of authorship in it. I present the matter because I believe, with the President, it is a matter that Congress should approach leisurely, deliberately, carefully, and thoughtfully. If I can succeed in stimulating your thinking on the subject, and your active interest in trying to find a solution for the problem, and to cause our committee to begin a careful study and analysis of the situation, then everything I have started out to do will be accomplished and I shall feel that the Congress is for the first time perhaps approaching this perplexing problem in a way that may give promise of pleasing results. [Applause.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to speak briefly in respect to an item which you will find included in the hearings on this bill, but which is not actually in the bill itself for reasons which will be developed later. I refer to the matter of appropriation for the Federal Communications Commission.

For years on the floor of this House and elsewhere I have joined with other Members of the House on both sides of the aisle in advocating a thoroughgoing investigation of radio broadcasting and its regulation under the Federal Communications Commission. I have done so because it has seemed to me that such an investigation was absolutely essential if we are to have proper regulation of this activity which has come to play such a tremendous part in our national life.

No man, Mr. Chairman, can read the Federal Radio Act or the Federal Communications Act without realizing that Congress sought in those acts certain very definite objectives. Among these objectives was the elimination of monopoly or the evils of monopoly, the elimination of private ownership or the equivalent in radio frequencies, and the elimination of undesirable trafficking in licenses. And yet, Mr. Chairman, during recent years there has been continually increasing evidence indicating that no one of these objectives or other objectives sought by the Congress have been realized.

On the contrary, there has been increasing evidence indicating a virtual monopoly in this field by the three big broadcasting chains—Columbia, Mutual, and National. There has been mounting evidence also of practices growing up with the approval of the Commission such as that whereby radio stations and facilities are transferred from one party to another for an approved consideration far in excess of the replacement value of the assets transferred, a practice carrying with it all the possibilities for the capitalization of Government franchises to the detriment of the people as a whole, with which we have been familiar in other fields in the past.

Mr. Chairman, the hearings before your committee show no decrease in these tendencies during the past fiscal year. On the contrary, they furnish further evidence of monopoly and further evidence of transfers of facilities for considerations in excess of their physical value. If you want an example of increasing monopoly I refer you to the transfer of WNAX, as a result of which during the last campaign an Iowa newspaper already controlling three frequencies was awarded a fourth frequency, with substantially blanket control over the State of Iowa. If you want further evidence of the transfer of facilities for apparently excessive consideration, you will find it in the table filed by the Communications Commission in connection with these hearings.

The record also indicates, Mr. Chairman, an absolute failure by the Communications Commission to formulate major policies, which, in my judgment, are fundamental to the proper regulation of radio broadcasting. We have no national communications policy today. Chairman McNinch has so testified. We have no standards of program service, despite the hundreds of complaints received in each and every year. No policy has been formulated as to the issue or transfer of radio licenses. No policy has been defined in respect to experimental licenses, in respect to the possible payment of license fees, in respect to many other important matters within the field of radio regulation. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I believe it is fair to state that regulation to date has proceeded in large measure in the absence of well-defined policies under frequent charges of favoritism, politics, and worse.

Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the attention of the members of this committee to that portion of the hearings which refers to the recent telephone investigation by the Communications Commission. I assume that every Member of this House desires proper regulation of all means of communication. I assume also that every Member of the House has anticipated a report within the terms of the resolution authorizing the investigation, giving "accurate and comprehensive" information with respect to the field investigated. I submit, however, Mr. Chairman, that the record before your committee raises very definitely the question whether it is not a practical impossibility for the Commission to comply with its mandate to furnish this Congress with information which may fairly be said to be "comprehensive and accurate,"

If you will note the testimony in the hearings you will observe that the methods employed in the investigation were such as to deny to those investigated the right to produce their own witnesses, the right to cross-examine Government witnesses, and, until recently, the right to consideration of some 40 volumes of criticism and comment filed with respect to the testimony included in the record of the investigation. I am frank to state, Mr. Chairman, that in my judgment the testimony before your committee lends real foundation for the charges which have been made that the methods pursued in the investigation were both unworthy of a Federal commission and un-American.

I want now to say a word in regard to the steps which have recently been taken with a view to reorganizing the Federal Communications Commission. I believe this is important because of suggested legislation in this connection.

I have here a copy of Business Week for December 1938. In that publication you will find an article which starts out as follows, "Say 'Uncle' to Corcoran":

The Federal Communications Commission is the latest to feel the weight of Thomas Corcoran's hand. He is not only rewriting the basic law under which the F. C. C. is functioning; he is giving orders to the Commission. "We're getting rid of so-and-so," he telephoned one Commissioner. "You vote with us or else."

Under date of December 7 a front-page article appeared in the Washington Post under the heading "Bill Reported in Making To Scrap F. C. C.; Three-Man Board Believed Aim."

The article reads in part as follows:

Legislation designed to abolish the Federal Communications Commission and to substitute a more centralized administration is being drafted by Thomas G. Corcoran, coauthor of several New Deal acts. * * It is believed to have the approval of Chairman Frank McNinch.

When Mr. McNinch was asked about the latter article he denied any knowledge of it, stating that he had not read it, and that, as far as he knew, no legislation had been drafted by any human being in connection with the Commission. When asked if it was contemplated or was his thought that the Commission should be abolished and a more centralized administration substituted in its place, he declined to answer on the ground that the answer would involve communications between himself and the President.

Let me point out some of the steps that have been taken, with these newspaper statements as a background. The first step taken under the heading of "Reorganization" was the elimination of the general counsel. The general counsel, a man of years of experience, a veteran, was in effect discharged from the Commission, as I understand it, for inefficiency. I am informed that at the present time he is employed by another agency at exactly the salary which he earned with the F. C. C.

In his place the Commission employed two counsel, a general counsel and an assistant, Messrs. Dempsey and Koplovitz, 33 and 29 years of age, respectively, no doubt with ability, but with very limited experience, said to have been strongly recommended for appointment by Corcoran.

The second step was an attempt to persuade the Civil Service Commission to except from civil-service status about 50 of the staff of the F. C. C., including the head of the Information Service and the entire board of examiners.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. I wonder if the gentleman can give us any information as to why Mr. Wisner was dismissed from the office of Director of Information. I may say that in my long newspaper career here Mr. Wisner was one of my esteemed colleagues in the press gallery. I had constant contact with his activity at that time and later, when he had charge of the press relations of the F. C. C. I never knew a more conscientious, more industrious, and, in my opinion, more capable official than Mr. Wisner. He was always extremely helpful in his service to the representatives of the press, who hold him in the highest esteem. I was utterly amazed when I learned he had been incontinently fired from his position.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I thank the gentleman for his observation. My understanding is that Mr. Wisner has been in the service for a very long period of time—some 15 years, I think—and that his efficiency rating was excellent. As far as I am concerned, Mr. McNinch failed to give a satisfactory answer to the gentleman's query as to the reason for the removal.

The request for action by the Civil Service Commission was opposed by certain members of the F. C. C. and did not meet with favorable action by that Commission. The position of the Civil Service Commission is indicated by its statement that—

It may state in this connection that it believes it would not be obeying the direction of the President in his Executive order were it to concur in the recommendation of Chairman McNinch in his letter of September 23, to increase the number of nonmerit positions in the Federal Communications Commission.

That step having failed, another step was taken under the leadership of Chairman McNinch. This step consisted in the adoption of an order by the Communications Commission, an order adopted without prior submission to the Civil Service Commission, as required by applicable Executive orders, an order adopted also without apparent consideration of the veterans' preference applying to the discharge, dropping, or reduction in rank or salary of any honorably discharged soldier or sailor, an order which, among other things, proceeded to abolish entirely the office of the head of the Information Service and the entire Board of Examiners. The order was adopted by a 4 to 3 vote in the Commission.

In place of the head of the Information Service, Mr. Wisner, to whom the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Ludlow] has just made reference, and whose salary, incidentally, was $4,600, the Commission employed a Director and Assistant Director, Mr. Ramsay, at a salary of $7,200, Mr. Smith, at a salary of $3,200, and, I think, also one or two additional persons in the clerical force. As I understand Mr. McNinch's testimony, the functions of the new personnel are substantially those of the office which the order eliminated.

Of the members of the board of examiners, which was abolished by the order, all but two were transferred to the legal division under the jurisdiction of the general counsel. The other two were let go, one of them the chief of the division, Colonel Arnold, being a gentleman with a fine record overseas with the Rainbow Division who for years has had the rating of Special Assistant Attorney General, who at one time was Assistant Director of the Veterans' Administration and who had been for some three and a half years with the Federal Communications Commission.

No hearing was accorded those discharged.

Under the terms of the order a brand new method of hearing is provided for.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield, briefly.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman explain how the Government controls the issuance of licenses to the radio com-

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. As a matter of policy, each license is subject to review every 6 months. Under the law they may be issued for a period of 3 years.

Mr. FISH. But, actually, are they issued for 6 months?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Actually, as a matter of practice, they are issued for a period of 6 months.

Mr. FISH. Therefore, the Government has complete control of these licenses every 6 months.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. That is correct.

Mr. FISH. Does not that give a great deal of control to the administration with respect to radio licenses?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I think it does, and I am inclined to think from various points of view, including that of administrative expenditure, that it might be advisable to make the period a longer one.

As I was saying, a brand new procedure for hearings has been set up as a result of the order of the Commission on November 9. I think it is a matter of vital importance. If I understand the new procedure correctly, under its terms we no longer have a hearing of the facts before a specially qualified examiner with independent standing by reason of his civil-service status. We have no findings embodied in a public document, as a result of the hearing made by the examiner who heard and saw the witnesses testify. We have no embarrassing examiner's report which the Communications Commission must consider in arriving at its decision in any case.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

In place of that procedure, we have simply the taking of testimony by any employee of the Commission whom the Commission may designate and the preparation of proposed findings of fact for the Commission by any person whom the Commission may designate.

Listen to the testimony of Mr. McNinch in this connection. On page 1513 of the hearings, in response to an inquiry as to whether or not a member of the staff at a salary of $2,400 a year was now acting in the capacity of examiner, Mr. McNinch replied that he saw no reason why-

A bright young lawyer, at $2,400 a year, could not sit and take evidence; for he is not, as you recall, to make any comment or findings on the evidence, or do anything whatever with the evidence as taken except to transmit it bodily to the Commission as taken. He has no other function or duty in connection with it.

Mr. Dirksen. He makes no findings?

Mr. McNinch. None whatever. Mr. Wigglesworth. He does not prepare a report that goes to the Commission?

Mr. McNinch. No, sir

Mr. Wigglesworth. That is prepared by some attorney in the force?

Mr. McNinch. Whoever the Commission may direct

Mr. Wigglesworth. It may be entirely a different person from the one who takes testimony?

Mr. McNinch. It might be.

Wigglesworth. There are no special requirements; anybody may be designated.

Mr. McNinch. Yes, sir.

Mr. Chairman, as I see it, this new procedure that has been set up by the Commission abolishes anything like the customary quasi judicial hearing that we have been used to under the Interstate Commerce Commission and other similar agencies. As I see it, the dividing line between the quasi judicial function of the examiner and the function of attorney representing the Commission is eliminated. The entire procedure is placed solely within the control of the general counsel, in this instance a man said to have been strongly recommended for the position by Corcoran. I question, Mr. Chairman, under these conditions, if an applicant obtains the type of hearing which as a matter of law he is entitled to.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman believe it is a wise policy for newspapers to control the radio at the same time?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, that is a large question. I think it is one of the major items that ought to be gone into and carefully considered. I am opposed to undue monopoly in the broadcasting field, in any form. I am not prepared at the moment to say just where the line should be drawn.

Mr. FISH. I asked the question because I believe the gentleman has made a very thorough study of many aspects of Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I think it is a major item that should have been gone into long ago, and that should be gone into now if we have the proper kind of investigation.

Mr. Chairman, the steps taken by the F. C. C., to which I have referred, look very much to me like steps along the course outlined in the newspaper articles to which I have referred. Taken in conjunction with the proposed three-man set-up, they look to me very much like an attempt to wipe out the Commission as we have known it in the past and to substitute a more centralized administration. They look further very much like an attempt to bring this quasi judicial agency under the domination of the executive branch of the Government, in line with the proposal embodied in the original reorganization bill a year ago which excited such condemnation from those primarily affected.

I could speak at length and in detail on this subject, Mr. Chairman, but I shall conclude. The move for a thoroughgoing congressional investigation of radio broadcasting and its regulation gained powerful support in this House last session. The President of the United States has now stated publicly that he is "thoroughly dissatisfied" with conditions at the Commission, and recommends remedial legislation.

Chairman McNinch looks forward to such legislation, and at page 1515 of the hearings makes the following statement:

There will be legislation, Mr. Wigglesworth, in all human probability, which will bring up the whole subject, in which I know you are interested, and it will give everybody an opportunity who is interested in it; because there could be no such legislation, I take it, without an opportunity for a thorough and full investigation and examination of the Commission, its work, its action-

Mr. Chairman, I agree with these sentiments 100 percent. In order to legislate we must, of course, first have a thorough and full investigation. There has been no thoroughgoing investigation in this field for upwards of 12 years.

I have at the moment a resolution providing for such an investigation pending before the Committee on Rules of this House. My good friend and colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Connery] has a similar resolution pending. There may be other similar resolutions before the Rules Committee. I hope, and hope sincerely, Mr. Chairman, that this House will see its way clear to authorize a real investigation in the very near future in order that we may have full information upon which to base new legislation as suggested by the President. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

RUSHMORE

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, in the Black Hills of South Dakota there is being executed the most colossal and sublime sculpture ever conceived by the mind and executed by the hand of man. It so dwarfs the sculpture of the world that there is no comparison; there is only contrast. I refer to the group of great American figures being carved out of the granite summit of Mount Rushmore by Gutzon Borglum, the noted sculptor, who executed the living Lincoln head which has graced the rotunda of the Capitol Building for more than 30 years.

I have traveled through every State in the Union and seen all of its wonders, both natural and artificial, but when last September I rounded a point in the Black Hills from which this majestic spectacle can first be seen miles away—the heads and faces of Washington, Jefferson, and Lincoln—I felt at once that this was the sight of my life.

When at last I stood across the gorge from the base of the mountain and gazed up, the thought came to me that if the present race of men were to become extinct and a new generation came upon these gigantic heads hewed out of the mountain top, they would worship them as gods. It was impossible to keep one's eyes off of those great faces. One looked till his eyes ached, and kept on looking.

It seemed impossible that such human portrayals could be wrought out of rock in such gigantic proportions and invested with the personalities of men. The face of Washington, dominating the group, wears the same serene high dignity, the face of Lincoln carries the same brooding thought that we are familiar with in the most intimate representations of these great men; and for the first time I looked upon a face of Jefferson which gave me what seemed a distinct impression of the real man. I have no doubt the treatment of Theodore Roosevelt now in progress will be as satisfying as these other faces already limned upon the rock.

It is all the more incredible when one learns that from the crown of the head to the point of the chin it is 60 feet; that the nose is 17 feet in length, larger than the entire head of the Sphinx of Egypt; that the eye is 9 feet across and the mouth 18 feet; and that these heads are drawn to the scale of a man 465 feet tall. Sculpture on a scale never before attempted. I call it not colossal or stupendous. Such magnitude in art beggars all superlatives.

It is likewise incredible that these lifelike reliefs have been brought to their present state by hard-rock miners with diamond drills and dynamite. They have yet to be dressed and polished and brought to ultimate perfection by sculptors. But even if they were left as they are now they would stand for all time as living American history, expressed in imperishable character.

It is an awesome but not phantasmal thought that the rising sun of 10,000 years will light up those lofty and majestic countenances; that the storms of 10,000 years will beat in vain upon them; and that long after the star of empire has set and the true likeness of all other men who played a part in its history has been obliterated, these four great faces will still look down upon whatever type of man and government may flourish on the globe at that remote time.

Rooted deeply in the granite structure of the earth from which they have been carved, they are more firmly founded than the pyramids, more enduring than the sphinx. Only a major catastrophe of nature can destroy them.

To the man whose genius has made this priceless gift to the ages it must be a satisfaction beyond the power of words to express. Centuries hence people from all parts of the earth will journey to Rushmore to see a spectacle which dwarfts the sculptural wonders of Egypt and Greece and Rome. It is commensurate to the greatness of America, fixed forever

I would that all Members of Congress might go to Rushmore and stand and look. The case would be complete for the appropriation of every dollar needed to finish this immortal work. God sparing me, I shall pass that way again. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT, AS INTERPRETED AND ENFORCED BY NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD, DEPRIVES EMPLOYEES OF THE RIGHT TO BARGAIN COLLECTIVELY THROUGH REPRESENTATIVES OF THEIR OWN CHOOSING

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries an appropriation of $3,189,600 for the Labor Board. The C. I. O. has wired many of us asking that the amount be increased to $3,230,000.

The National Labor Relations Act is so unfit for the purpose for which it was enacted; it has been so misused by those appointed to administer it, that an amendment of the act leaving in office those who have been charged with its interpretation and enforcement will not insure to the employees the rights given them by the seventh section of the act.

PERSONNEL ADMINISTERING THE ACT SHOULD BE CHANGED

Inasmuch as an amendment of the act would leave the present personnel in full charge, the act itself should be repealed and an act to diminish the causes of labor disputes, drawn solely with that purpose in mind, should be reenacted and a nev body created for its enforcement, or the judicial powers incorporated in the act turned over to the Federal courts.

While general discussion and general arguments are of value, the citation of a few concrete instances showing the fallacies of the law and the spirit in which it is interpreted may bring home to all of us a realization of the present act's imperfections and the utter failure of those charged with its interpretation and enforcement to either understand or to be willing to carry out the purpose for which it was enacted.

A CONCRETE EXAMPLE

Let me call your attention now to one instance—and there are hundreds of them—which will show you just how this act, as interpreted, affects the worker and the employer.

The American Cyanamid Co., a Maine corporation, with its principal place of business and sales offices in New York City, through its ownership of the capital stock of seven companies, is engaged throughout a large part of the United States and in some foreign countries, in the manufacture and sale of chemicals, dyestuffs, and other products.

The company owns and operates directly a plant at Bound Brook, N. J., which is known as the Beetle plant. Another subsidiary of the parent company is the Calco Chemical Co., maintaining plants at Newark and Bound Brook, N. J., the Bound Brook plant being engaged in the manufacture of dyestuffs.

A majority of the employees of the Calco Chemical Co. formed an independent union, which is known as the Calcocraft. None of the employees in the Beetle plant belonged to this union.

The Chemical Workers Local, No. 20923, an A. F. of L. affiliate, had members in both the Beetle and the Calco Chemical Co. plants.

ARBITRARY SELECTION OF UNIT

Under section 9 (b) of the Wagner Law the Board has authority to decide whether in each case the unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining shall be the employer unit, craft unit, plant unit, or subdivision thereof.

ARBITRARY DENIAL OF REPRESENTATION

In July of 1937 the Calcocraft, acting under the act, filed a petition with the proper representative of the Board, alleging that it represented 955 production employees out of a total of 1,570 employed by the Calco Chemical Co., and asked that it be certified as the bargaining agent.

BOARD BEGINS COERCION

On September 2, 1937, acting upon charges filed by Chemical Workers local, the regional director issued a complaint against the Calco Chemical Co. and the American Cyanamid Co., charging the first with sponsoring the Calcocraft union.

FINDS COMPANIES GUILTY

Hearings were held on this complaint from September 9 to 30 and, on February 18, 1938, the trial examiner filed his intermediate report, finding that the Calco Chemical Co. and the American Cyanamid Co. had engaged in unfair labor practices and recommending that they cease and desist therefrom.

MAKES COLLUSIVE AGREEMENT

On March 28, 1938, the two companies, the Chemical Workers Union, and the Board entered into an agreement of settlement with reference to the unfair labor practices charged in the complaint of the Chemical Workers local filed in September of 1937, which provided that an order might be entered by the Board requiring, among other things, that the Calco Chemical Co. withdraw all recognition at its Bound Brook, N. J., plant from the Calcocraft—

As representative of its employees for the purpose of dealing with them concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work, and to disestablish all relations to said organization.

The agreement further provided that the companies reinstate and pay certain sums to certain employees who were members of the Chemical Workers local.

ENTERS COERCIVE ORDER

The Board, on the 28th of April 1938 dismissed in its entirety the complaint against the American Cyanamid Co. and made an order requiring, among other things, that the Calco Chemical Co.

Withdraw all recognition at its Bound Brook, N. J., plant from the Calcocraft as representative of its employees for the purpose of dealing with them concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment or conditions of work, and disestablish all relations to said organization.

The order further required the Calco Chemical Co. to post a notice for a period of at least 30 days in conspicuous places throughout all departments of its plants containing this statement:

The company will and hereby does withdraw all recognition from the Calcocraft as representative of its employees for the purpose of dealing with them concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work; and the company will and hereby does disestablish all relations with the Calcocraft.

HOLDS BELATED ELECTION

On the 7th of July 1938 the Board, having designated the Calco Chemical Co. and the American Cyanamid Co. at Bound Brook, N. J., as the appropriate unit, held an election of the employees of both of these companies at Bound Brook, N. J., for the purpose of enabling the employees to select their bargaining representatives.

It should be remembered that the Calcocraft had members only in the Calco Chemical Co., while the Chemical Workers local had members in the Calco Chemical Co. plant and also in the Beetle plant of the American Cyanamid Co.

It should also be noted that the ballot submitted to the employees did not contain the name of the Calcocraft and the question to be decided by the employees was whether or not they desired that the Chemical Workers Local be chosen as the representative for collective bargaining.

The Board by this procedure strengthened the Chemical Workers local and weakened the Calcocraft by adding to the number of qualified voters the workers in the Beetle plant.

On the election board were five representatives of the two companies and five representatives of the Chemical Workers local. No one representing the Calcocraft was permitted to sit on the board.

This election, notwithstanding the adverse conditions under which it was held, resulted in a determination of the production employees of the two plants that they did not desire the Chemical Workers local as their bargaining agent.

BOARD DISREGARDS ELECTION

Here you will note that the Board by its order required the employer to withdraw from all recognition of the bargaining representatives selected by the employees by a majority vote. Section 7 of the act provides:

Employees shall have the right to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in concerted activities, for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.

You would assume, would you not, that under this section the employees would have the right to be represented by the Calcocraft for all bargaining purposes? You would assume, would you not, that they would not be forced to accept the Chemical Workers local as their bargaining agent after they had rejected that organization by more than a majority vote?

DEPRIVES EMPLOYEES OF RIGHT TO PRESENT GRIEVANCE

In view of the provision in section 9 (a) which reads-

Provided, That any individual employee or a group of employees shall have the right at any time to present grievances to their employer—

Would you not assume that the majority of the production employees in the Calco Chemical Co. would have that right?

Yet the Board denied them that right in its order of April 28, 1938, for it expressly provided that, in its Bound Brook plant, the Calco Chemical Co. withdraw all recognition—

From the Calcocraft as representative of its employees for the purpose of dealing with them concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work.

From the decision of the Board denying the employees the right given them by the act itself, the employees have no right of appeal to the courts unless the Board has seen fit, as it does not in the vast majority of cases, to make the employees parties to the hearings before the trial examiner or the Board. Employees, by the act and by the interpretation placed upon it by the Board, are deprived as a rule of any right of appeal to the courts.

This is the Board which is today asking that we appropriate $3,189,600 for the carrying on of its operations—a Board which in this particular case has gone directly contrary to the provisions of the act and has denied to the workers of the Calco Chemical Co. the right to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing.

A. F. OF L. GENERAL COUNSEL CONTENDS EMPLOYEES DENIED SELF-ORGANIZATION

Will you listen, please, to this statement?-

One would imagine by the position taken by the board that section 7 was an absolute guaranty to all employees to self-organization. One would imagine that every employee under section 7 has the absolute right to freedom of choice in respect to representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining. Nothing can be further from the truth.

That statement was made before the United States Supreme Court on the 17th day of October 1938 by the Honorable Joseph A. Padway, general counsel for the American Federation of Labor, who was then speaking on behalf of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. It is not my statement; it is his statement.

Getting back now to the plight of the production employees of the Calco Chemical Co., the Board having ordered that the company withdraw all recognition from their union, that the company refuse even to meet them, although that right was given them by subdivision (a) of section 9 of the act, on the 28th of July 1938, they filed in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit a petition to review and set aside the order of the Board.

BOARD RESCINDS ITS ORDER

On August 12, 1938, the Board notified the Calcocraft that it would apply to the court for permission to vacate and set aside its findings and order of April 28, 1938, for the purpose of taking further proceedings before the Board.

On August 18, 1938, the Board did enter its order vacating and setting aside its findings and order of April 28 and directing that such further proceedings be taken as the Board might be advised were necessary or desirable.

BOARD TAKES ADVANTAGE OF ITS OWN NEGLECT

The Board stated in this order that it was made pursuant to the authority conferred by paragraph (d) of section 10 of the act, which provides:

Until a transcript of the record in a case shall have been filed in a court, as hereinafter provided, the Board may at any time, upon reasonable notice and in such manner as it shall deem proper, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any finding or order made or issued by it.

In connection with this reason given by the Board let me call your attention to the fact that from the time of the making of the order on the 28th of April 1938 up to the time of the filing by the Calcocraft of its petition with the circuit court of appeals on the 28th of July 1938, the Board had taken no proceedings in that court for the enforcement of its order and hence had not filed a transcript of the record as it would be required to do if it took such proceedings.

Subdivision (f) of section 10 provides for an appeal from a final order of the Board by any person who has been aggrieved and requires the aggrieved party to file in the court a transcript of the entire writing of the proceedings "certified by the Board."

In this particular case, although Robert B. Watts, associate general counsel for the Board, on July 28, 1938, stated in writing that "the record will be certified and filed as promptly as possible and you will be notified of the filing," the Board did not certify the record; but on August 18 it set aside its order, assigning as one reason for its action that a transcript of the record had not been filed; thus taking advantage of its own wrong after it had violated its own promise.

And this is the Board which today is asking that it be given $3,189,600.

The circuit court of appeals permitted the Board to withdraw and set aside its order of April 28, 1938, and the Board is once more either taking proceedings or considering the

EMPLOYER, HAVING OBEYED THE BOARD'S ORDER TO REINSTATE AND PAY EMPLOYEES FOR LOST TIME, AFTER REINSTATEMENT AND PAYMENT, FINDS THE ORDER VACATED

In the meantime, the employer has reinstated and paid the men it was ordered to reinstate and to pay by an order which the Board itself has now vacated.

Were the men so entitled to be paid the sums which the company did pay them? Was it right and just and equitable that the company be required to pay those men? If it was, why should the order be now set aside?

After ordering that the Calco Chemical Co. withdraw all recognition from the Calcocraft as representative of its employees and refuse to deal with them concerning their grievances, the Board now sets aside that order and retains the case for further proceedings-this more than a year and a half after the Board assumed jurisdiction of this labor

For a year and a half the Labor Board has been interfering in the relationship existing between this employer and its employees, and the employees are still deprived of the right of collective bargaining through representatives of their own

The foregoing is just one of many, many like cases.

Let another case be cited.

On the 31st day of December 1936 the C. I. O. and its communistic allies took over the automobile factories at Flint, Mich. They held possession of those factories until the 11th day of February 1937. The direct loss to the wageearners of General Motors alone has been set at a million dollars a day.

During the whole period of 44 days and from that day down to this date, what has the Labor Board done to lessen the cause of industrial dispute? Has it made a complaint against General Motors?

As early as Tuesday, January 5, 1937, General Motors inserted a full-page ad in the Detroit papers in which, among other things, it stated:

General Motors is pledged to collective bargaining on the basis of absolute and uninfluenced freedom of choice on the part of any worker to join any organization without coercion, restraint, or intimidation.

The Board did not, as it has authority to do under the act, make a complaint; it did not determine the bargaining unit; it did not call an election to select representatives for collective bargaining. It, by its silence, lent active assistance to those who unlawfully occupied those plants.

Defiance of law, violence, riots, anarchy, and bloodshed continued and this Labor Board, which is now asking for upwards of $3,000,000, took no effective measures to end the dispute, to lessen the causes of dispute.

On January 28, 1937, in another full page ad in the Detroit Free Press, General Motors, after referring to its statement of January 5, among other things, said:

Three weeks have passed. During that time we have earnestly striven to do everything possible to develop negotiations with the group that has attacked us, in the hopes of reaching a satisfactory solution that will protect the interests of all involved and enable you to go back to work. * * Over a hundred thousand have signified their desire to return to work. * * * I have told you signified their desire to return to work. * * * I have told you before and you yourself have always known that you are deprived of the right to work by a small minority who have seized certain plants and are holding them as ransom to enforce their demands.

It again announced its willingness to negotiate as soon as its plants were vacated.

When it was apparent that the citizens of Flint would no longer submit to the unlawful acts of the sit-down strikers and that a force was being organized to throw the sit-down strikers out of the plants, without the cracking of a single head or the breaking of a single limb, the sit-down strikers marched out and, on the 11th day of February 1937, a written agreement with General Motors was signed.

What is the situation today? Homer Martin, the leader of the sit-down strikers of 1937 recently said there had been since the signing of that agreement, 1,000 wildcat strikes.

Two years have passed and today General Motors is refusing to bargain collectively with its employees. Why? Not because it does not wish to bargain collectively with representatives of the unions, but because there is no one with whom it can bargain.

Homer Martin claims that he is the man who represents the U. A. W. A. Thomas, of a rival group, says that he and his associates are the ones with whom collective bargaining should be carried on.

General Motors does not know, it cannot know, with whom is can safely bargain and through it all the Labor Board, which 2 years ago could have made a complaint, called an election, designated the bargaining unit and determined the representatives for collective bargaining, sits, so far as solving the real problem is concerned, idly by.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield. Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Does the gentleman know that the Labor Board is the father of the C. I. O. in this country and is more responsible for labor trouble than any other factor in this country today?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Answering the gentleman from Missouri, I may say that I do not know whether it is the father of that law or of this trouble, but I do know-because the record shows it-that since the Labor Board has been active we have had in 1 year more strikes, more days lost to the wage earners, more days of employment lost in 1 year than we had in 4 years before the act went into effect.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. GEYER of California. I am wondering if there might not be other contributing factors such as greater mechanization of our industries rather than just the existence of the Labor Board. Would the gentleman care to discuss this feature?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I freely admit there are various causes, but the one outstanding cause is the fact that the Labor Board has taken under its wing one labor organization and has been attempting to build up that organization at the expense of all others. It has gone partisan. That is what is the matter with it. It is aiding the C. I. O. in its effort to tax every worker in the United States, or to try to tax every worker in the United States. The Board is putting the C. I. O. in a position to make every man who wants to work pay tribute to it. If you do not believe me, get any of the newspaper boys in a corner and ask them if they can hold their jobs without paying dues to the C. I. O. What will they tell you? Ask them; try it.

It is time we amend the Wagner Act—rather it is time we repealed it, because only by repealing it can we get rid of the present officials. In its place let us enact a law to carry out the purpose of the original Wagner Act, which was to diminish the causes of labor disputes.

Let us rewrite the law so that those charged with interpreting it, with determining whether there has been a violation of its provisions, are separate and distinct from those investigating or prosecuting complaints. Let us not have in one group of men or in one board those who are charged with the functions of a detective or sheriff, a prosecuting attorney, and a judge.

Let us by the act itself give protection, not only to the employer but real protection to the individual employee, as well as to the union organizer and the union.

Let us by all means provide for a fair and impartial interpretation and administration of the law.

If we are to have a Federal agency charged with investigating complaints of unfair labor practice, let us then vest the judicial functions, which the Labor Board as now constituted exercises, either with the Federal courts or a new independent agency, not connected in any way with those who receive, investigate, and prosecute complaints of unfair labor practice.

When we have done these things we will at least be on the road toward a mitigation of the causes of labor disputes. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

THE MOUNT RUSHMORE MEMORIAL

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the remarks of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Martin], who told you of his recent personal visit to the Mount Rushmore Memorial. It is incomparably the greatest memorial we have in America, and will be completed for a fraction of what is spent on other efforts of less grandeur and permanence.

The Mount Rushmore Memorial is converting a granite mountain into the great heads of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt. The sculpturing is being done by Gutzon Borglum, whose Lincoln head and Greenway figure are here in the Capitol.

The work has been in process for about 11 years. It has not been possible under the funds available to work steadily all of that time, but year by year progress has been made. At the outset, the funds were to be raised by private subscription, and about $100,000 was so raised. In addition, the State of South Dakota has spent over $1,000,000 in building highways to the memorial. And, I may add, the crowds last summer were so great at the mountain that more roads must be added this year.

When President Coolidge visited the Black Hills in the summer of 1927, he visited Mount Rushmore and saw there the gigantic size of the work and began to understand what it was all about. It was at his suggestion that Federal interest developed in Mount Rushmore. Since then, each President has visited the mountain and has added his support to its completion.

THE EXTENT OF FEDERAL PARTICIPATION

The first legislative act passed by the Congress providing participation by the Federal Government called for matching what had been provided by private subscription. A few years later it was provided that the full amount of the $200,000 contribution authorized by the Federal Government should be made available. This was later supplemented by a $250,000 authorization and a bill passed during the last Congress authorized $300,000; making a total of $750,000 authorized for the participation of the Federal Government in the construction of the Mount Rushmore Memorial. The $250,000 item in the pending appropriation bill is the balance in the last authorization and, based on the promise of the sculptor to the committee, is for the completion of the figures by June 30, 1940.

The work is being carried on under the supervision of the Mount Rushmore Memorial Commission, a body named by the President and headed by the Honorable Key Pittman, Senator from Nevada, as chairman.

The gentleman from Colorado spoke of the size of the memorial. It might be helpful in visualizing for those who have not seen it to realize that the scale of the Mount Rushmore figures are such that if you were to take off the tapered part at the top of the Washington Monument the figures would be on the scale of a man that high, the height of the Washington Monument. The head of George Washington would just fit within the dome of the Capitol Building. It is the most colossal sculpture the world has ever seen; it will outlast anything man has ever built or carved, heretofore.

A MONUMENT FOR ALL AGES TO COME

It is important to remember the kind of granite out of which the Mount Rushmore Memorial is being carved. The late Dr. O'Harra, former president of the State School of Mines at Rapid City, when the mountain was being examined determined that the rate of erosion in the granite was at the rate of one-fourth of an inch in a hundred thousand years. The sculptor said he thereupon added 18 inches to the length of the nose of George Washington with the thought that it would add millions of years to the life of the monument. In any event, the monument will be there for all conceivable time.

It is situated in the heart of the continent far away from any place where any vandal nation might have any desire or opportunity to bomb or destroy it. Sculpture in the past has been the booty of raiding armies. When the Greeks were at the height of their power, and when the Romans were at the height of their power, they looted the capitals they captured and took away the great sculpture that had been collected. The Rushmore Memorial simply will not be moved. It is part of the mountain itself.

A woman gazing at the Washington head a few summers ago said, "It looks as if it had been there for all time." Of course, it had; but it took genius to reveal it. The sculptor took a rough, scarred mountain crossed with crevices and crossed with the striations of centuries, peeled off the face of it, and there revealed fresh granite, and gave it life. The heads live. They have features such as those on Borglum's Lincoln in the rotunda of the Capitol, and will speak for all time to come of the kind of men who gave character and form to the Republic.

TO BE COMPLETED IN 1941

On the showing that was made before the subcommittee in the hearings the sculptor proposes to complete the figures by the end of June 1940. The appropriation in this bill is for the completion of the work. These figures start at the head and carry down below the hands until the figures finally blend into the mountain.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. May I call the attention of the distinguished gentleman to the fact that in the magnificent work that Gutzon Borglum has been doing and the hundreds of men he has been employing all these years, not one human being has been injured or killed in this work; and while insurance companies in the beginning refused to insure these men, they are today willing to insure them and have insured them.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is a very significant observation and should be considered along with the fact they have been working under tremendous handicaps. They went out there to sculpture a mountain not reached by roads or highways. They had only a rough logging trail at the outset over which to carry the powder, tools, and machinery that were necessary.

Gigantic excavation or construction is something that ordinarily entails many accidents and possibly the loss of life, even when you are not trying to preserve a mountain for sculptur-ing while you blast it. Here men had to be swung down from a mountaintop to work for hours suspended in a harness, while the wind blew upon them unprotected. The men are transported to the work in a bucket by a cable that crosses a great canyon. The mountain is a great mountain that stands in bold relief against the sky, and the men working on the skyline seem like pygmies.

MEMBERS OF CONGRESS SHOULD SEE THIS MEMORIAL

It is really breath-taking and stirs the hundreds of thousands who see it each year as it stirred the gentleman from Colorado. I hope every Member of Congress may see Mount Rushmore. When the Legislative Committee was considering it a year ago and questions were asked about the details, I said, as others have said, that the answer to every question in reference to Mount Rushmore is to see it. You will come away with a greater love for your country than you ever have had before.

A member of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson], at one time told me he found it difficult to justify this project. I said, "I hope you will go there and see it." I was pleased recently to hear him say that he visited it last summer and it exceeded all his expectations, and that he believed the memorial by all means should be completed.

I may say that one of the reasons for urgency in completing the memorial is that undertakings of this character naturally depend on the personality and the genius of the men behind them. The sculptor of this memorial is now 67 years of age. The finishing touches that are now required call for his personal and immediate supervision. Those of us who have seen this memorial grow realize it is important that it be completed while the sculptor is at the height of his powers and able to give it the finishing touches it deserves.

I urge every one of you who believes in the perpetuation of American ideals to see Mount Rushmore, and do it at your first opportunity. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Lanham, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the independent offices appropriation bill, 1940 (H. R. 3743), had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the remarks I made today and include therein a few short statements.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the Record the remarks I made today and to include therein some of my remarks before the legislative committee dealing with the subject on which I spoke.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and include therein a statement prepared by the Domestic Fats and Oils Conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by including therein a copy of a letter I sent to Mr. Altmeyer, Chairman of the Social Security Board, and a copy of his reply.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I did not know the Committee was going to rise so early. I had asked permission to address the Committee for 10 minutes in connection with a subject about which I believe the House should know something this evening. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, in the independent offices appropriation bill, now under consideration, there is a legislative provision that not more than $10,000 can be paid to a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Board of Tax Appeals, the Maritime Commission, the Civil Aeronautics Authority, or the Tariff Commission. I say this is not economy, and when the provision is reached I propose to make a point of order against it. I believe I can prove the provision is not a limitation within the meaning of the Holman rule, because in the end it will provide for an additional expenditure of the Government rather than a reduction. True, it might be a saving on this appropriation bill, but later on it will cost the taxpayer more.

There are four cases which have been tried by the Court of Claims involving situations where the Congress, by adding a limitation on an appropriation bill or not appropriating sufficient money, had reduced the salary of an official of the Government below the amount provided in the organic law. In each instance the Court of Claims rendered a decision in favor of the plaintiff.

On two occasions the Government appealed to the Supreme Court, and in each case the Supreme Court sustained the Court of Claims. This convinces me, and I believe it should convince the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole such a provision does not involve a saving, because the officials will go to the Court of Claims and demand that they receive the salary the statute provides. Then the Attorney General will have to employ an attorney and probably pay him $10,000 to fight the case. When finally decided, if precedents count for anything, the decision will be in favor of the officials.

It is my purpose to bring these decisions to the Chamber tomorrow and place them at the disposal of the Chairman. I hope when I put the citations in the Record tomorrow those interested will look up the cases.

The citations are:

Robert M. Danford against United States, Court of Claims Reports, 51, 61, page 286: Court held plaintiff was entitled to recover. As commandant of Military Academy, statute provided he was to receive pay of a lieutenant colonel. For 2 years pay was reduced due to failure of Congress to appropriate sufficient money.

Strong against United States, Court of Claims Reports, 1924–25, page 627: Statute provided that each professor at the Military Academy whose service exceeds 10 years shall have pay and allowance of colonel. Court held pay and allowance fixed by law and while Treasury could not pay until necessary appropriation was made, the liability of the United States to pay exists independently of the appropriation and may be enforced by proceedings in the Court.

United States against Laughton, United States Reports, October term, 1885–86, page 389: Court of Claims held Laughton, Minister to Haiti, was entitled to salary allowed by law. Government appealed to Supreme Court. Court held in part that, according to the settled rules of interpretation, a statute fixing the annual salary of a public officer at a named sum without limitation as to time, should not be deemed abrogated or suspended by subsequent enactments which merely appropriated a less amount.

James against United States, United States Reports, volume 202, October term, 1905: Charles P. James was an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. After his death administratrix brought suit to recover $6,688.90, holding judge was paid at rate of $4,000 per annum while statute fixed salary at $5,000. Judgment favorable to plaintiff.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Is it not true that the same provision has been carried in similar appropriation bills ever since the Economy Act of 1933?

Mr. COCHRAN. In part it has been carried in such bills, and I understand that right at the moment the officials affected are preparing to go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MICHENER. In other words, the officials are receiving the salaries provided in this bill and have been receiving these specified amounts since the Economy Act?

Mr. COCHRAN. In some instances, yes, they are receiving less salary than the statute provides; but with respect to at least two commissions mentioned in this bill, the Maritime Commission and the Civil Aeronautics Authority, you are reducing the salaries for the first time.

Mr. MICHENER. You are reducing their salaries below what these men are getting now?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes. That, I insist, is a matter for the legislative committees. Let those committees look into the work the officials are performing and report to the House if they feel they are overpaid.

I believe in saving money for the Government, and I think my record shows it; but I say that this provision should not be in the bill. It will cost the taxpayer more in the end. If you want to reduce salaries, submit your proposal to the proper legislative committee, bring in a bill, and let the House yote on it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I believe we can say in general that the committee felt these men who are on comparable commissions should be treated alike. Does not the gentleman believe an amendment is in order under the Holman rule, which proposes to reduce any item of salary?

Mr. COCHRAN. But are they on comparable commissions? In view of the decisions of the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court, I do not believe an amendment is in order that reduces the salary of an official below what the statute provides, if it can be shown by court decisions the cost to the Government will be increased in the end.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman will yield further, I may say I agree with the gentleman that the committee cannot bring in legislation on the bill, and that if the statute fixes a salary the committee cannot on an appropriation bill change the amount fixed by the statute if a point of order is made against the provision. However, the committee may appropriate a smaller amount, and what are you going to do with the committee if it does not, in its appropriation bill, appropriate the amount provided in the statute as the statutory salary?

Mr. COCHRAN. Try and defeat the committee's recommendation. In each of the cases I refer to, the Court of Claims certified to the Appropriations Committee the amount that was due, plus interest, and your Appropriations Committee appropriated that amount and paid the claim.

Mr. MICHENER. I understand that.

Mr. COCHRAN. I realize the committee will argue it is justified in making all salaries the same. We must understand the duties of the officials are not all the same. We have just set up the Maritime Commission and the Civil Aeronautics Authority. In both instances provisions were made to pay the Commissioners and Administrator $12,000 a year. The time to have reduced that was when the bill was pending. Here you have situations where just recently the Congress, the last Congress in one instance, passed legislation fixing the salary at a certain sum and now in this Congress, not the Legislative Committee but the Appropriations Committee, says we do not propose to pay them more than $10,000 per year. You have men on the Commissions who are setting up new organizations. One commission—the Maritime Commission—is handling a billion and a quarter dollars. They are doing a good job, and some of the members of the Commission could get much more with private corporations. The Civil Aeronautics Authority requires technical men also, experts in this line, and there is a great demand for men of their ability in private industry. We have good men and they took the positions expecting to get what the law provided, and you should not now reduce their salaries in this way.

This is false economy, if that is what you are striving at. Why, if this procedure is recognized and upheld, if Congress did not like an official who could not be removed, there would be nothing to prevent the committee from providing that not more than $1 a year should be paid from the appropriation for that certain official. He would either have to accept the dollar per year or resign.

Outstanding executives, well schooled in the work they are engaged in, will in the end save money in administration, while incompetent officials will do just the opposite. The provision should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to any reduction in the amount to be allowed the National Labor Relations Board and I favor the Budget estimate of $3,229,600 for that Board. In support of this, Mr. Speaker, I wish to read from telegrams I have received from labor unions in my district:

Request you support administration's demand for appropriation for Labor Board.

This comes from the miners' union at Stockett, Mont. Then from Roundup, Mont., also from a miners' union:

Request your support of administration's demand for appropriation for Labor Board.

This is signed by Local Union 3574, at Roundup, Mont.
This telegram comes from Bearcreek, Mont., in Carbon

Request you support administration demand for appropriation for Labor Board.

This comes from the secretary of the miners' union at Bearcreek.

I have here another one from Great Falls, Mont., signed by the Cascade County Trade and Labor Assembly, the largest local labor organization in Montana:

Urgently request that you use your utmost efforts to provide for appropriation of $3,230,000 for National Labor Relations Board without riders or qualifications.

Again, from the same organization, a similar request, and then from Great Falls comes another telegram, signed by the United Mine Workers of America, Sandcoulee, Mont.:

We respectfully and urgently request you vote full appropriation to National Labor Relations Board without riders or conditions attached.

Again, from Great Falls, another labor union wires:

Urge you vote for full appropriation to National Labor Relations Board without riders or conditions attached.

Again from Great Falls, from another union, John Clark, Great Falls Mill and Smelter Men's Union, the second largest labor organization in my district:

Urge vote for full appropriation to N. L. R. B., without riders or conditions.

Again a telegram reading:

Vital that appropriations for N. L. R. B. go through in full without riders.

Signed "Montana State Industrial Union Council," which is, perhaps, the third largest labor organization in the Second Congressional District, which I represent.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the requests and pleadings of these people should be given heed in this body, which is the only forum to which they can present their claims, and that this amount requested by the Budget should be appro-

The Budget, if no one else, certainly knows the amount that will be necessary to carry on the work of the Labor Relations Board. It is true the Board has been under some criticism, but it does not make any difference what kind of board you have, you will always find critics; and, in my opinion, this Board has done the best it could under the circumstances, and, in my opinion, the Budget is right when it asks for this much money for them to carry on during the coming year.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes: I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It should be stated that the committee is recommending, in the item that is recommended here, an increase over last year, both to take care of the increased personnel in the field and an increase here in Washington. The committee made its suggestion of some reduction in the Budget estimate because it felt that it was not necessary to have as large an increase in Washington as originally requested; and on this point I want to read a couple of sentences from the hearings when a Member asked certain questions of Mr. Madden, Chairman of the Board.

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Madden, since the Board, under the act, has become a permanent establishment, and has received the approval not only of Congress but now of the Supreme Court, do you anticipate a lessening in the number of cases to come before you?

Mr. Madden. I certainly do, ultimately. There is not any question about that.

On the basis of the fact that the decision of the Supreme Court was expected to lessen the trend of cases coming before the Board, the committee felt it was generous in giving them some increase; but felt, with the prospect of the number of cases being reduced, it was not necessary to make as large an increase as was asked for originally.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is my conviction that the business before the Board will increase rather than decrease.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Thorkelson] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to use that time today.
